

America's true pastime

Former Carolina baseball coach Walter Rabb was in a thoughtful mood Wednesday, and he didn't want to make an unfair comment about either side of the dispute brewing in the major leagues.

"I can't really make a definitive statement because I don't know the financial condition of all the major league clubs," Rabb said.

But a man who played in the minor leagues for four years—from 1937 to 1940—when monthly salaries looked more like a weekly check of today is not without some feeling.

"You have to look at the inflation rate. But it's hard for people who have been in baseball a long time not to think the demands (of the players) are a little exorbitant."

or the owners," Keller said. "The average salary for a major league player is $135,000. That's way out of line. Lawyers, doctors and other professionals work for years, learning their jobs. A lot of them don't make $100,000 a year. It's a disgrace."

Carolina baseball was at it finest for the home folks Wednesday. They got a victory, lots of sunshine, most consumed some of their favorite beverage and they watched the college kids play ball.

These are fellows who don't make $135,000 per year, though most of them would love to have a chance for some of the majors' big money upon graduation. They are players—most of them, at least—who are receiving room, board and tuition to play UNC baseball.

As Carolina fan Ed Leight said, the majors don't compare very well to the college game, especially the game and its accompanying rites in Boshamer Stadium.

"Compare it to Carolina baseball?" Leight asked as one Tar Heel led the Stadium gathering with a Carolina cheer. "You'll never see this. This is great. You see good cheers, watch some chicks and get a suntan."

Sure the San Diego Padres have their Chicken mascot, the Baltimore Orioles their "Wild Bill" and the Chicago Cubs their bleacher bums, but Leight was 100 percent correct.

College baseball, perhaps more than NCAA football or basketball, remains apart from its professional counterpart, and the situation in Chapel Hill points it out best.

People trek to Boshamer for a good time, without the hassles of ticket distribution or talk of astronomical salaries to get in the way.

The big leagues really are a different ball game, for more reasons than show up in the RBI totals.

Golfers sixth

HOUSTON—Frank Fuhrer shot a 71 to lead the North Carolina men's golf team to sixth place after the first round of the Houston All American Classic Wednesday.

The Tar Heels fired a team total of 289 and trailed Houston and Texas, who were at 280.

Fuhrer was followed in the Tar Heel scoring by Mike West and John Spelman at 72. Todd McGrew and David Whitfield shot rounds of 74 to complete the team total.

Greg Yung of Texas had the individual lead going into today's second round with a 69.

Godiva club for runners of all types

Perhaps you've seen them by now, trotting down the road in pairs, in packs, or often by themselves. Now that spring is here, they suddenly have appeared in all shapes and sizes: with Marine-shaven heads and bouncing ponytails, in Bermuda shorts, alligator shorts and almost no shorts at all.

Hecklers call them a lot of things. The University Police sometimes call them traffic hazards. But all that really matters is what they call themselves: runners.

"And they're exactly what we're here for," said Walter High, president of the Carolina Godiva Track Club. High wears the orange and gold insignia of the famous lady with pride, and the Godivas have one of the largest club enrollments at Carolina with more than 400 signed and 150 active members.

Perhaps it is the club's name which draws attention to the runners. Unlike the potentially confusing titles of the Karate Club, the Sailing Club, or the Crew Club, Carolina Godiva has a number of stories tracing its origin to 1976.

"We have three different ideas of how we got our name," High said. "Some people feel we were named after a club in England, while others say Lady Godiva is a sign of protest towards the varsity athletic program. And then again, some folks think we just started out as strikers and got the name like that."

But regardless of how it began, the club's name has spread throughout North Carolina. The club's excellent medical and training advice, the races the Godivas organize and hold, and the number of its gifted runners are known across the state.

"We're really excited to be presenting our track (meet) series for an extended season this year," High said.

The meets High referred to are a set of weekly races which involve four races: a sprint, a mid-distance run, a long run, and a walking race. Entrants may participate in any or all of the events, because distances for the Saturday races vary from week to week.

The Godiva club claims several of the finest runners in the state, including Dave Hamilton, who recently won a half-marathon race in Winston-Salem, in 1:08. Another top runner is Richard Schwartz, a second-place finisher in last Sunday's Great Raleigh Road Race, and a sub-4 minute miler as an undergraduate.

of roughly 1000 racers. "Now I know there's a lot more runners than that in Chapel Hill, because people are finding out about all the physical benefits of running," High said.

Copies of details and entry blanks for the Tar Heel 12,000 (as well as Godiva membership applications), are available at American Athletics, from any club member, or by calling 929-9058.

NOTES:

The deadline for four-man teams in this year's Intramural golf tournament is this Friday, with play to begin late next week. Students entering should sign up for tee times and pay their $3.50 tournament fee at the I. M. Office.

Groups of three interested in the all-campus triples volleyball tournament should sign up to participate in either competitive or recreational divisions by Friday, April 16.

Also, the Intramural Office is accepting applications for positions in next year's IM program. Both office jobs and spots on the Intramural Advisory Board are now open. For information, call 933-5311.

The UNC Club Football Team built its record to 2-0 following Saturday's 14-0 victory over Davidson College. Touchdowns were scored by a Joe McCullen pass to Lee Evans, and a reverse play to Keith Black. The next game will be April 12 in Wilmington, vs. either High Point or N. C. State.

Bill Fields

The Major League Players Association announced this week that unless a new basic agreement is worked out by May 22, there won't be any big-leaguers on the field.

The basic agreement outlines general working conditions for the players and includes free agent provisions which permit veteran players to move from one team to another. The bottom line may be more money for more players, if a provision is made to let players become free agents after four years with a team instead of the six now required.

"I hope they both lose their shirts—the owners and the players," said "Sarge" Keller, who handles the public address duties at Carolina games and did the same for seven years with the Cleveland Indians.

"I don't sympathize with either the players

IMs & Clubs

By CHIP KARNES

Is the Carolina Godiva Track Club simply a haven for the elite? "Not at all," High said. "This is because the majority of club members just enjoys running, and we usually only run and compete with others on about the same level."

The Godivas sponsor races each fall and spring, the latter to be held in Chapel Hill April 26. Named the Tar Heel 12,000, the event of approximately seven-and-a-half miles will feature T-shirts, complete results mailed to each participant, three aid stations and, High said, "Lots of beer at the finish."

Last year's Tar Heel 12,000 meter race had a
