

Carrboro aldermen discuss land use plan

By BEVERLY SHEPARD
Staff Writer

The Carrboro Board of Aldermen will hold a public hearing tonight to discuss the town's proposed land use plan, which includes a provision that could make it easier for developers to build apartments in Carrboro.

Included in the plan is a proposal to increase the allowable density for residences, which could encourage the construction of multi-family units, Carrboro Planning Director Sonna Loewenthal said. If the plan is approved, builders would be able to put 14 housing units per acre of land in specified areas. Town ordinances currently allow only nine housing units per acre of land. This density increase could help the town deal with the student demand for off-campus housing. Loewenthal said. Carrboro Town Attorney Michael Brough said that without the density increase the potential for more multi-family housing in town would be severely limited. Loewenthal also said with the increased use of land the costs of housing construction could be lowered.

In a meeting last week, Emmett Pendergraph, a member of the town's planning board, said he thought the new town ordinance should contain a limitation on the amount of land the University can purchase at tax exempt status for student housing. Pendergraph said he objected the University's construction of the student apartments on the Couch Property in Chapel Hill.

"I believe the University can easily decide to build an off-campus complex and any exempt units, so that the entire town could be purchased," Pendergraph said.

Brough said such a prohibition on University ownership had not been considered and he also said he doubted such a provision could be included in the proposed plan.

The proposed plan includes a new provision for the creation of neighborhood parks and bikeways. If approved the ordinance would require developers to reserve some land for recreational parks and greenways. Loewenthal said the plan will be presented to the town aldermen in the beginning of the summer for approval.

Brough said the changes in the town's zoning ordinance called for in the proposed plan would not alter drastically any of the town's current zoning.

"From my point of view, this ordinance does not change what we have," Brough said. "It just backs up what we're doing."

Phi Beta Kappa honors 129 Carolina students

Phi Beta Kappa, the nation's highest scholastic honor society, initiated 129 students into the University chapter last week.

The admission standard to Phi Beta Kappa is a 3.7 grade point average and 75 credit hours for juniors. Seniors must have a 3.6 GPA and 105 credit hours. Phi Beta Kappa limits admission to less than 10 percent of the graduating class.

Students initiated were: Judith Ann Ammer, Karen Lynn Barber, Pamela Anne Bath, Eric Wayne Beck, Jean Crowell Beckham, Helen Rose Bellar, Marc David Bishop, Dan Patrick Brady, Christine Fedynskij Brewer, Timothy Robert Bridges, Jefferson Whitaker Brown, Martin Todd Brown, Henry David Bruton, Kim Allison Bullock, Bruce Staley Bosso, Eileen Patricia Clark, Leigh Ellen Clawson, Laura Ann Colby, John Cameron Coppala, Robert Wayne Cramer and Berryman Theodore Cudd Jr.

Title XX-funded UNC employees to shift projects

By NORA WILKINSON
Staff Writer

Most of the University's 68 employees in eight Title XX programs which lost funding will be transferred to other projects or kept on until April 30, and at least one program may be able to continue next year.

General guidelines set by Vice Chancellor for Business and Finance John Temple's office provide that "people who could be used on other projects would be transferred to those projects on April 15," said William J. Clement, UNC director of contracts and grants, last week.

"In order to transfer employees, funds had to be available and there had to be a legitimate need for them on other jobs," Clement said.

Those employees who could not be transferred probably will be kept on until April 30 to give them ample time to find other jobs, he said.

On March 24, UNC officials were notified that approximately $1.5 million in federal funding to Title XX social work programs would end on March 31.

University officials objected to the six-day notice of the funding cutoff and argued that their contract with the state allowed for a 30-day notice.

The state maintained that the 30-day notice did not apply in the case of lost federal funds.

Since the cutoff, Title XX administrators and University officials have been searching for alternate funding in order to provide their employees with the traditional 30-day notice.

On April 1, UNC and state budget officials negotiated a job extension until April 14 using administrative funds from the Title XX program managed by the N.C. Department of Human Resources.

That extension, added to the current one, gives most employees the 30-day notice that University officials deem necessary.

"The University has been trying to make it as easy and fair as possible in contrast to their rather summary notice given by the Department of Human Resources," Clement said.

The Institute for Social Services Planning, one of six Title XX programs in the UNC School of Social Work, may be able to remain intact, said Morton Teicher, dean of the school.

The purpose of the program is to help improve the quality of public welfare service.

"We're continuing to hope and work for alternate funding. However, we're not very optimistic about the period beyond May 1, excepting the one program (ISSP)," Teicher said.

BSM criticizes 'Yack'

By KERRY DEROCHE

In response to several pictures that appeared in the 1979 Yackety Yack, the Black Student Movement will file a formal complaint with 1979 Yack editor Chrisann Ohler, BSM chairperson Mark Cannady said Sunday.

The complaint will request an apology from Ohler. Other letters of complaint will go to the Interfraternity Council, the Phi Gamma Delta fraternity, the Chi Phi fraternity and the national Chi Phi fraternity, he said.

"Freedom of speech is fine for a newspaper, but this is a yearbook which should present what is agreeable to all students. It did not do this so it did not fulfill its function as a yearbook," Cannady said.

One picture in the Chi Phi fraternity section that the BSM referred to portrays a dramatization of the lynching of a black man by several Ku Klux Klan members.

Another picture it objected to shows the national symbol of the Phi Gamma Delta Fraternity, a caricature of a black man called the "fiji man."

The BSM also objected to the mention of a cook in a fraternity as "Lizzy" and a passage in the yearbook which referred to Hinton James as "The Jungle."

"We're talking about concrete feelings and concrete heritage. The pictures hold very negative connotations for the black community and, therefore, it is very hard to justify them," Cannady said.

Chrisann Ohler, editor of the 1979 Yack, said she believed the yearbook presented the campus as it was. She said that was the yearbook's responsibility.

"The pictures were in no way an editorial support of that kind of action," Ohler said. "It was hoped that people would realize that there is a lot of prejudice on campus."

"That section was not the editorial portion of the book. It's hard to believe that it is being construed as a part of the feeling of the staff," Ohler said.

Cannady said the letters would include an invitation to the groups to discuss the issue Sunday.

Talk draws little attention

Housing Advisory Board Chairperson Sharon Meginnis is puzzled as to why only four out of 11 board members and one out of all of the residents on South Campus showed up for a discussion Sunday on racial imbalance and racial distribution in University housing.

The meeting Sunday was to be the first of two discussions planned to solicit dorm residents' opinions on the subject. The second was planned for the beginning of next year on North Campus.

Based on estimated housing figures, the majority of black students live in dorms on South Campus. When housing department members assign a student to a dorm they have no knowledge of his race, housing administrative assistant Phyllis Graham said recently.

The board members discussed other ways to get the students' views. One member suggested taking a written survey.

Meginnis said she had some speculations on the poor attendance at the meeting. It might have been the nice weather, the busy weekend or the apathy among the students, she said.

The resident that did show up lived in James. Meginnis said the resident, believed that if any changes were to be made, they should be done on a major scale and not just with a few students. He also believed that the changes should be made with upperclassmen and not freshmen, because some students needed a sense of community their first year.
