

Coaching change brings discipline into Georgia Tech program

By BILL FIELDS
Sports Editor

* Second of seven parts

ATLANTA—If someone wants to talk with a Georgia Tech football player after 11 o'clock one night this fall, he will be out of luck unless it's a Saturday, the only day of the week the Yellow Jackets aren't subject to an 11 p.m. curfew.

And if the friend wanted to take his football player buddy to a favorite night spot for a beer on that Saturday night, he might as well find another drinking partner. Drinking beer in public is also a no-no for the Yellow Jackets.

A year ago, when the flamboyant Pepper Rodgers still coached Tech, it might have been the player making the party invitation. Now, with Bill Curry as coach, the Yellow Jackets are experiencing a complete turnaround in philosophy. While Rodgers, who was fired after last season, let his players come and go as they pleased, Curry doesn't allow any hijinks.

If there was a word stressed Tuesday as Curry and several Tech players talked with writers on Operation Football, it was discipline. Curry believes in it, and more important for him, his players do, too.

In fact, Ivey Stokes, a starting linebacker, said the team wanted more control over it when Rodgers coached.

"The feeling was that everybody wanted more discipline," said Stokes, a 5-foot-11, 215-pound senior. "They saw that (a lack of discipline) was hurting us. There were a lot of distractions. The players weren't getting along. It was time for a change."

Curry, a former Georgia Tech standout who went on to start at center for Green Bay and Baltimore in the National Football League, said when he arrived in January, "there were no rules."

Curry said his approach to putting the Yellow Jackets in more orderly fashion has been well-planned, and goes along with his personality. "To institute a bunch of rules and be hard-nosed doesn't prove anything...it has to be well-planned. I believe it begins with mutual respect. That's the heart and soul of discipline.

If you don't have the respect factor, you have to resort to fear. That's not my style."

Curry's manner has been well-received by the team, but that was a question when he first took the job.

"When you talk to him, you get the feeling that he knows what it's all about," said quarterback Mike Kelley, who set school records last year for pass completions and total yards. "He's more accessible. He can talk to you in a person-to-person relationship. The door is always open."

As far as Tech's personnel is concerned, Curry said his biggest worries are the offensive line and the linebackers, where there are few experienced players. Curry hopes his team can implement an adequate running game—led by 6-3 tailback Ronny Cone—to make rival defenses think about more than putting Kelley on his back.

Curry stressed that his players are not toiling in an oppressed atmosphere, but in one of fairly strict guidelines designed to help them benefit more from college. While off the field, discipline may not result in more touchdowns for the offense or tackles for the defense, but Curry and his players feel it can't hurt.

Does the world need another light beer?

Frankly, we had our doubts. Which is why we made sure Stroh Light would be more than just another light beer. It has one-quarter fewer calories than our regular beer per twelve-ounce serving, but it's specially brewed to give it a real beer taste. It's far richer and mellower than you'd ever expect, with a lot of body and a generous, long-lasting head. Try new Stroh Light. One taste and we think you'll agree.

The label says light, but the taste says beer.
