

Debates would go on even without Carter

WASHINGTON (AP)—The League of Women Voters said Wednesday that if John Anderson is invited to debate with President Jimmy Carter and Ronald Reagan, the event would take place even if Carter refuses to participate.

The president has said he is willing to include Anderson in the debates as long as the first one is a head-to-head affair between Carter and Reagan. That raised the possibility he might not take part if the league invites Anderson for its debate opener in Baltimore Sept. 21.

"Traditionally, the league has gone on with its candidate events if there are two or more candidates who agree to appear together—even if somebody chooses not to participate," said Ruth J. Hinerfeld, president of the organization.

The league plans to decide Sept. 10 whether Anderson has met its criteria for taking part in the debate. One of the qualifications imposed by the league is that a participant get at least a 15 percent approval rating in the latest public opinion polls.

Meanwhile, in Atlanta, Anderson was denied a spot on the Georgia general election ballot Wednesday, after more than 16,000 of the signatures his campaign workers submitted were ruled invalid.

Georgia Secretary of State David Poythress announced that the disqualifications mean Anderson will not meet the state requirement of 57,539 valid signatures to win a line on the ballot.

A spokesman for the Anderson campaign in Atlanta, Kevin Zetena, said a court appeal of Poythress' action would be considered.

Georgia law requires that the number of signatures on a candidate's nomination petition be equal to 2 1/2 percent of the number of voters in the most recent gubernatorial election.

The verification process "was carried out carefully, with utmost care," Poythress said. He said a total of 24 investigators and other staff members in his office worked on the effort, in addition to 35 county officials.

Polish government sets price controls

JASTRZEBIE, Poland (AP)—Polish coal miners, victors in their strike, started returning to work Wednesday. The government acted to halt rising living costs by announcing price controls would be imposed on food, consumer goods, repairs and fares for public transportation.

The plan for special controls on prices, including meat, was announced as the labor settlement promised to end a nationwide labor rebellion that wrung unprecedented concessions from a Soviet-bloc government.

The State Price Committee was taking control of fixing prices for 47 basic foods and 55 consumer items such as shoes, toothpaste and electrical appliances.

Storms cause power outages in area

Electrical storms in the area Wednesday night caused power outages in Chapel Hill, Carrboro and the University campus.

A worker in the power plant at the University said that as of 9:30 p.m. Wednesday, workers had not been able to determine all the places that power was out or exactly what caused the outage. However, power was out in the Carolina Union around 7 p.m. for about 15 minutes. He said the outage was probably caused by lightning and was on a Duke Power line.

Ted Wilkerson, a superintendent with Duke Power, said power went off in University Mall around 7:30 p.m. and came back about 7:50 p.m. for about 20 minutes. Power then went out again and was not back on as of 9:30 p.m. This outage also was attributed to lightning, which probably ran in on a switch or cable, Wilkerson said.

The second electrical storm of the night caused a power outage in Carrboro, Wilkerson said. Power was out near the 54 bypass, on Merritt Mill Road adn on Main Weaver and South Greensboro streets. He said a tree limb probably was involved in that outage.

year alone. "When (property) revaluation is completed, it will be unfeasible to own property," Lloyd said. "This is a tremendous concern among the people, and if they continue to push us it will start a war."

The property revaluation now in process is expected to quadruple property values since the last appraisal in 1972, Lloyd said. But according to Whitted, the revaluation is a question of mechanics, whereby the tax burden is shifted personal property back to land property. Unlike land, personal property is reassessed every year, Whitted said.

Whitted's position was strengthened recently when in a speech to the N.C. Association of County Commissioners, Gov. Jim Hunt declared his support for county officials beleaguered by tax cut measures.

"I have seen what happens to courageous commissioners who have to raise property taxes to pay for schools and medical clinics," Hunt said. "We cannot allow county governments to be squeezed tighter and tighter in a vise created by mandatory programs on one side and an unresponsive and unpopular tax base on the other."

State government is looking for ways to lighten the tax burden on county governments, said Brent Hackney, Hunt's press secretary.

"In general, North Carolina is pretty fortunate," Hackney said. "We have a good tax base, a balanced budget and none of the problems afflicting other states with large urban areas." The tax question has not played a major role in the race for governor so far, Hackney said.

could be watered one day a week. Emergency wells were drilled, including one near the Bell Tower parking lot. At one point, The Daily Tar Heel ran daily consumption counts.

At that time plans were drawn up to put into effect if the lake went 96 inches below the dam. If it had, water would have been turned off in residence halls, including washers, dryers and urinals.

But the lake did not fall that low. On Oct. 26, two inches of rain fell, raising the level of the lake 33 inches. The drought was over and the Phase III restrictions were lifted two days later.

There are five phases to the ordinances, each based on University Lake's level. As the lake level goes down, OWASA may ask the mayors and the county commission to enact another phase of the ordinance. When the lake drops to 132 inches below the dam, the fifth, or rationing phase, is implemented.

"We have received good cooperation from the student body, staff and the University in previous requests," Billingsley said. "We would anticipate, if we invoke some restrictions, that we would have the same type of cooperation."

photographs taken at the scene of the shootings may be used as primary evidence—evidence that can stand by itself. Defense attorneys objected to Long's ruling, arguing that rulings by the state Supreme Court prohibit use of photographs as primary evidence in North Carolina courts.

The pictures were taken by photographer Don Davis of the Greensboro Record shortly after the demonstrators were shot.

The communist demonstrators were killed at a rally advertised in advance by the CWP as a "Death to the Klan" event.

for the record

In the Aug. 27 issue of The Daily Tar Heel, Campus Governing Council Speaker Cynthia Currin was quoted as saying that the CGC gets only 36 percent of student activities fees.

The CGC actually receives 51 percent of undergraduate fees and 36 percent of graduate fees.

The DTH regrets the error.
