

Youth fine when winning, Tech's Dockery says

"The only time that having a young football team bothers me," said Texas Tech football coach Rex Dockery, "is when we lose."

Dockery shouldn't be worried at this point in the season. The Red Raiders opened last Saturday with a 35-7 win over Texas-El Paso. Still, the team's youth is on Dockery's mind.

"We've got a lot of players that don't have much experience," Dockery said. "We've got to make sure that we don't beat ourselves."

The Red Raiders are coming off a disappointing 3-6-1 season in 1979, but Dockery said he has already seen some things about his 1980 squad that he likes.

"We've only had one game, but everybody played hard and wanted to win," he said. "The players also played with a lot of cohesiveness. They believe in each other."

Defense is the strong point of the Texas Tech team. The Raiders return several starters and top reserves to the defensive lineup, including safety Ted Watts and 280-pound nose guard Gabriel Rivera, who both have been mentioned as All-America candidates.

"I guess the best thing that I can say about Ted Watts is that he never has a bad day in practice," Dockery said. "He always gives 110 percent and he likes to play football."

"Rivera is a very physical football player. He showed a lot of discipline by losing around 30 to 35 pounds over the summer and coming back in good shape."

Although Tech scored five touchdowns and had 519 total yards against UTEP, offense remains Dockery's biggest concern. "Our defense is a little ahead of our offense right now just because they're more established," Dockery said. "But we'll have to wait and see. You can't tell a whole lot from one game."

One of the biggest question marks in the Raider offense may be the running back positions, where Tech needs to fill the gap left by the graduation of All-Southwest Conference back James Hadnot.

"We don't have any backs who have gained more than 150 yards, so that concerns me," Dockery said. "We'll just have to wait and see how they perform."

One bright spot that Dockery found in the offense in the season opener was the play of junior quarterback Ron Reeves. Reeves was the Red Raider starter last season until a shoulder injury sidelined him in the eighth game. In his first game since recuperating from surgery, Reeves connected on 11 of 16 passes, including three touchdown passes. He currently is the nation's No. 1 quarterback in passing efficiency.

"He's practiced all fall and has been doing fine," Dockery said. "Of course (Carolina's) secondary will be much better than the one we faced last week, so they should provide him with a bigger challenge."

As for Saturday's game in Lubbock with the No. 15-ranked Tar Heels, Dockery said the contest should be very close.

"The game will be won by the team that makes the fewest mistakes. I think it could come down to the kicking game."

Dockery is most concerned about UNC tailback Amos Lawrence.

"I don't think you can ever stop Lawrence, because he's going to get his yardage. From all of the films that I've seen of him, it looks like you just have to try and stop him from getting the big gains."

Saturday's kickoff has been moved from 7:30 to 1:50 p.m. to accommodate ABC-TV regional television coverage. The game can be seen locally on Channel 5, with the pre-game show starting at 1:30.

UNC baseball works to fill gaps during 28-game fall schedule

The UNC baseball team opens its 1980 fall season tonight at East Carolina hoping to fill several key gaps for the spring lineup.

"Basically, we need this time to take a good look at our new people and try to mold them together with our old players," Carolina coach Mike Roberts said. "It cuts our experimenting in the spring to a minimum."

During the fall campaign, the Tar Heels have scheduled 28 games—all double-headers. No standings will be kept.

it keeps the expenses down," Roberts said. "We can also play a big schedule and still be finished by Oct. 7."

Roberts said the main focus of the fall season will be to set up a lineup for the regular season this spring.

"We're not going to play people just for the sake of giving everybody playing time," Roberts said. "We are only going to play the starters and the people that we think might be able to fill some of the gaps that we need to fill."

"We play the double-headers because
