Construction forces juggle of DTH's desks, nerves

By LYNN CASEY Staff Writer

The state and national editor is where the University editor was, the University editor and city editor are where the managing editor was, the managing editor is where the news editor was and the news editor is where the associate editors were, and they're where the staff writers were.

The staff writers are in the north gallery of the Carolina Union, where students and lost vagabonds used to enjoy the comfort of cheap vinyl couches.

The Daily Tar Heel experienced mass confusion and chaos Thursday when construction workers pushed living and nonliving matter 10 feet away from the east wall of the Union..

The wall is being torn down as part of the construction on the new Union addition.

move were Horace and Mildred (the Associated Press wire machines)," said Jim Hummel, the state and national editor. "They were right in the middle of the hog report when the movers came in. How would you like someone playing with your wires?"

Horace and Mildred are now located where the features editor was, the latter is now where the Weekender editor was, and the Weekender editor doesn't know where she is yet, said a spokesman for the campus paper.

Later, Melanie Sill, Weekender editor, said she had found her desk at the crossroads of death-in between the reporters and the telephones.

"Its going to be like working in the San Diego Zoo," Sill said.

Mark Murrell, features editor, said his writers were having a hard time finding him.

"They walk in in a daze, you know, with their "I think the ones who suffered the most from the eyes wide open. It's sort of like they're displaced persons, refugees from a war-torn land," Murrell wire machines. said.

Murrell, however, was optimistic about the outcome of the mass exodus. "We're used to chaos here," he said. "I know we can handle this. Is this not future shock?"

Assistant sports editor David Poole said, "We have a good young team, but this period of adversity will challenge us. We've got good senior leadership and I think we'll bounce back if everyone gives 110 percent."

Managing editor Dinita James took a different view about the unexpected move. "I'm mad as hell," she said.

"The problem is no communication. Howard Henry (Union director) must have changed his mind five times. When I left last night, I was under the impression that they were just going to move the

"During my 11 o'clock class this morning 1 was informed that they were moving everything," James said. "If they had told us they were going to move everything we could have had our stuff packed in boxes and the move could have just taken one hour. Instead, everything was confused and moving took up most of the day.

"I think it was inconsiderate." she said.

Union director Howard Henry said he was pleased with the way the move went. "Everyone has been very cooperative and everything is fine," he said.

The DTH staff deserves a pat on the back for adjusting so well, he said.

Fewer freshmen enrolled

Final fall 1980 semester enrollment totals show a decrease in the number of freshmen and graduate students at UNC from last year.

This year's freshman class of 3,232 has 222 students less than that of last year. The class is 57 percent female. UNC registrar Lillian Lehman said that the projected goal for the freshman class this year was 3,200. Lehman said that last year's higher enrollment was due to a larger number of accepted students who actually enrolled than expected.

Graduate student enrollment is down by 601 students from last year's 4,777, while professional student enrollment is larger than last year's. Professional students (law, dental and medical students), outnumber the 1979 class by only 26 students. Seventy-one percent are male.

Total undergraduate enrollment of 14,912 is 251 students more than the 1979 total of 14,661. Lehman said the larger number is due partially to the large freshman class admitted last year and an increase in off-campus students from last year. On-campus student enrollment of 19,913 this year is up from 19,511 last year. More than 56 percent of UNC undergraduates are female.

Overall enrollment for fall 1980 is 21,465 with a male-female ratio of 46.68 to 53.32 percent. The ratio of females to males has increased from 52.6 percent last year. Lehman said that little consideration is made between male and female applications for admission.
