

Crum hopes for better timing

Dick Crum hopes a fellow watching the ticks of a Timex won't have much to do with the outcome of Saturday afternoon's Carolina-Maryland football game.

Normally timekeepers and the work they perform go unnoticed. But when an unusual or controversial play occurs, things can change. Take last fall's Tar Heel-Terrapin game, for instance.

With Carolina driving with less than a minute to go, trailing 17-14 after a Dale Castro field goal seconds earlier, Mr. Tick-Tock all of a sudden became a celebrity of infamous nature for Carolina's players and coaches.

The Tar Heels started on their own 20 with 1:21 left, and in several plays advanced to the Terp 21. The clock said six seconds remained.

Crum called timeout, and on the next play quarterback Matt Kupec connected with Billy Johnson on a short pass. Johnson took a few steps and stepped out of bounds at the 14. The fellow with the Timex said time expired, and the game was over. Johnson looked up at the clock and saw the "00" on the Byrd Stadium scoreboard.

good weight program, but he refused to say they're stronger than he and his teammates. "They're a tough club, but I don't think there's a difference. I think we're as tough as they are."

Maryland is led on the defensive line by left tackle Ed Gall and right end Pete Glamp. The three-man secondary is all seniors—cornerbacks Steve Trimble and Lloyd Burruss and safety Ralph Lary.

The Terrapins' strength on offense is tailback Charlie Wyszoki, who already has 470 yards and four touchdowns in victories over Villanova, Vanderbilt and West Virginia. Wyszoki carried the ball 30 times against Vandervelt and Crum expects him to run even more—maybe more than 40 times—against Carolina.

Wyszoki is strong, often gaining yardage after the first hit, or with defenders on his back. "I don't think he has real great speed, but he's the hardest-running back we'll play against this year," said Lee Shaffer, one of UNC's inside linebackers.

Crum is concerned about Maryland's tall (6-foot-7) quarterback, Mike Tice. Tice has been criticized for lack of ability in four years at Maryland. So far this season, he's 17-of-40 for 251 yards and two touchdowns.

"Tice is probably their most underrated player," Crum said. "Last year (against UNC) he's the one that kept their drives going. He was the difference in the game."

Saturday's game is important for several reasons. It's the first ACC game for the two teams, and both were expected to be the top contenders for the league title. The game is a further test for Carolina quarterback Rod Elkins, who will be starting his third game.

"By now, Rod will be settled down," Crum said, noting how the 9-3 victory over Texas Tech helped his maturity. "I don't think the whole (offense) will be in. We'll still have bits and pieces that are not available."

Carolina enters the game having lost the last two years to Maryland. Shaffer said the Tar Heels haven't been up to par in the two losses. "I don't feel as a team we've played well against them, and this year, I hope we can do our best."

With the help of an accurate clock, of course.

Bill Fields

"That's in the past," Johnson said Tuesday, a Carolina football jersey and gym shorts covering his 250-pound frame. "I can't fault the timekeeper. We just have to go out this Saturday and jump on them."

Crum was mad when last year's game ended, and said he thought at least one second remained when the official signaled for the clock to stop. A writer asked Crum Tuesday what would happen if a similar situation occurred this Saturday at Kenan Stadium. Would the clock tick a little faster, as it apparently did in College Park?

"That's not going to happen at Carolina," Crum said. If he has his way, Crum will not find his team trailing and time expiring, but as the game approaches it shapes up as a close match between two teams with similar strengths.

"It should be a real interesting game, both for the players and for the fans," Crum said. "Both teams are evenly matched in the same departments. Defense is our long suit and offense is their long suit. Offensively, they are a power-type team."

Maryland, aside from being tabbed as the first Atlantic Coast Conference school to stress weight-training in a football program, is most known for its defensive alignment, the wide-tackle six, which is not common in the college game.

While Crum said he was more concerned about the people who play in the wide-tackle six than with the formation itself, Johnson said it was more difficult to block against.

"It is kind of hard to block them," Johnson said. "You've got to go through a lot of blocking schemes. They play so wide you just have to get used to it."

Johnson admitted the Terrapins are strong and have a

Marriage disclosed

O'Koren's wife asks for divorce

From staff and wire reports

Former University of North Carolina cheerleader Kimberly Rene "Kim" Cline, who says she has been married to former Tar Heel basketball star Mike O'Koren for more than two years, has filed for a divorce at Burke District Court in Morganton.

In divorce papers filed Sept. 3, the former Kim Cline is seeking temporary and permanent alimony and a legal separation from O'Koren, who recently signed a professional contract with New Jersey Nets of the National Basketball Association.

The exact amount of the alimony was not disclosed, but the divorce papers say O'Koren has signed a contract with the Nets for $250,000 a year and he will be paid $80,000 over the next three seasons for sponsoring sports equipment.

O'Koren, reached by telephone in Piscataway, N.J., Tuesday, said he really did not want to comment on the situation. "I wish things like this didn't have to happen," O'Koren said. "My lawyer's handling it, and I'm sure everything will be OK."

A court clerk said O'Koren and Cline were married on March 19, 1978, in Gaffney, S.C., by Probate Judge W.R. Douglas. South Carolina law no longer requires that witnesses to the marriage be listed.

The marriage came one week after Carolina was defeated by San Francisco in the first round of the NCAA basketball playoffs.

Mrs. O'Koren is living in New York and working as a model. She could not be reached for comment. Her father, Homer Cline of Drexel, declined to comment Tuesday.

The divorce filing accuses O'Koren "of refusing to live openly" as husband and wife and of telling Mrs. O'Koren that their marriage was a joke.

The court filing says O'Koren has repeatedly refused to discuss marriage difficulties with Mrs. O'Koren, saying such discussion "interferes with his basketball career."

The divorce complaint accuses O'Koren of "beating her with fist and hand, pulling her hair and choking her."

Ex-UNC standout Mike O'Koren ...secretly married in 1978

In Chapel Hill Tuesday, a friend of Mrs. O'Koren said, "I didn't know they were married until second semester of last year. I did know they were having troubles last year. I don't know why they were so secretive."

North Carolina head coach Dean Smith said a player being married during his basketball career did not violate NCAA rules. Smith refused to say whether he knew O'Koren was married. "I just can't comment," Smith said.

"It's something for Mike's lawyers. I don't even know if the story is correct. One part I know is not accurate is the physical abuse. That's just not true. It's unfortunate that this had to happen just when he's starting his pro career."

UNC Sports Information Director Rick Brewer said the marriage was a complete surprise to him. He said he knew no reason why it was kept secret.

According to court records, O'Koren has been served with a notice about the divorce filing but he has not responded in writing. A hearing has not been scheduled on the matter.

Women golfers 2nd in golf tourney

From Staff Reports

BOONE—The North Carolina women's golf team fell one shot short of Wake Forest in the Blue Ridge Invitational here Tuesday.

The Tar Heels' two-day score of 611 put them second to Wake Forest's 610. Carolina's Cathy Reynolds shot a 76 for a total of 147, a stroke behind the tournament champion, Wake's Charlotte Grant. Reynolds took medalist honors with a first-day round of 71.

Linda Mescan led the second-day UNC score with a 73. Lucy Lofland shot a 79 and both Jill Nesbitt and Maren Long registered 85s.
