Shelter for women to open soon

The Orange County Coalition for Battered Women will open a shelter in Durham on Oct. 15. The shelter is projected to house from 10 to 14 abused women and their children but will only be able to provide a place for one or two people until the coalition receives funding for a staff.

"We have applied for a grant and hopefully we will know how many staff members we can hire by November," said Connie Renz, director of the coalition.

The North Carolina Council on the Status of Women allotted the coalition

$4,000 to build the shelter. This money will cover only the first year. "We hope to receive federal and county funding to support the shelter in the future," Renz said. "We've received contributions toward the renovation and items for refurbishing, but we still need donations of either money or furniture."

The duplex has three bedrooms, two baths, two small dining areas and one living room. It will be able to house a woman for a maximum of six weeks.

Program to promote black health

The black Greeks at UNC are sponsoring Tuesday and Wednesday a "Black Health Awareness" program, focusing on diseases common among blacks.

The program is designed to make black students more aware of their bodies, said Donell Jones, a representative of Omega Psi Phi fraternity.

Tuesday, the program will focus on sickle cell anemia, and Wednesday it will deal with high blood pressure.

The program will offer screening tests for sickle cell from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Tuesday in Great Hall of the Carolina Union. Wednesday, at the same times, tests for high blood pressure will be available.

The sickle cell program will include a film presentation and lecture given by J. Robinson, a counselor with the N.C. Department of Human Resources. The film will be shown at 10 a.m., 12:30 p.m. and 2 p.m. Each presentation lasts about an hour, James Moore, coordinator of the event, said.

On Wednesday, along with the screening tests for high blood pressure, pamphlets and other information on the disease will be available.

All three black sororities and the three black fraternities are participating in the program.

How the human mind can expand the realm of possibility

"No barriers, no masses of matter however enormous, can withstand the powers of the mind; the remotest corners yield to them; all things succumb; the very heaven itself is laid open." These words were written by a man named Marcus Manilius almost 2,000 years ago.

Read them carefully. And remember them well. For though these words carry the advantages of eloquence, they signify much more than the facility of a writer who has long since turned to dust.

These words express a truth that time cannot age or alter. Because there is in all of us a need to understand that is immortal and insatiable. A need that makes the unknowable food for thought and the unheard-of music to our ears.

At Conoco Chemicals we are more than mindful of this need. It is an intrinsic part of what we are and what we hope to be. For our need to know has compelled us to develop the kind of technology that will solve the problems we put to it. The kind of technology that, when coupled with our financial strength and supply self-sufficiency, can breach the barrier between what is possible and what is not.

The many advancements and refinements that we are presently responsible for are, we feel, both proof and promise.

Because the level of technology that we have achieved is only the beginning of the kind of expertise that we are striving to attain.

For Manilius was right. There are no real boundaries to the realm of possibility. There are only opportunities. Opportunities that we intend to tirelessly pursue. Opportunities that we would like to share with you.
