

Food problems plague Soviets

MOSCOW (AP)—Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev said Tuesday that Soviet city dwellers were not receiving enough meat and milk and called for a new food production program to help feed the nation.

"Improvement of food supply comes first among the questions on which the living standards of the Soviet people depend," Brezhnev, 73, said in a speech at a plenary session of the Communist Party Central Committee.

He said that while overall agricultural production was increasing, "We still encounter difficulties in supplying the cities and industrial centers with such foodstuffs as milk and meat."

In a speech citing "shortcomings and bottlenecks" in the Soviet economy, Brezhnev was vague about the results of the 1980 Soviet grain harvest, saying only the average annual yield was more than 200 million metric tons during the five-year plan that ended Dec. 31.

Observers regarded his cautious statement as a clear sign that the harvest fell well below this year's goal of 235 million tons.

for plagiarism occurs when students omit quotation marks from direct quotes and only footnote. "This implies that they have paraphrased a source when actually they have not," Bledsoe said.

Though many students like other students to proofread their papers, if they are unsure about getting help on a paper, they should consult their instructors, Lindemann said. "When a student allows another student to do most of the work, that's clearly plagiarism," she said.

If a student is found guilty of plagiarism, suspension is the usual sanction according to the Instrument, unless "the court determines that unusual mitigating circumstances justify a lesser sentence."

The changes provided for the committee representative from the Division of Academic Affairs to be selected by an at-large vote by the faculty members in that division.

Another change made would allow librarians to vote on committee members but would not allow them to serve on the policy committee.

The final amendment added the Faculty Committee on Research as a standing committee of the Faculty Council. The committee will consist of nine members appointed to staggered terms by the chancellor. The committee will advise the chancellor and other administration officers on University policy and how it affects research.

The Faculty Council session heard and approved annual reports from its Advisory, Grievance and University Priorities committees. It also authorized the Educational Policy Committee to revise and report on any proposed changes in the undergraduate curriculum submitted by the dean of the General College and College of Arts and Sciences.

News In Brief

Former faculty member criticizes chancellor

WASHINGTON (AP)—A former teacher at UNC-CH said Tuesday her faculty committee was disheartened by the chancellor's refusal of their proposal for a new minorities affairs office.

Toye L. Lewis, a lecturer in the School of Social Work from 1975-1977, said the group called for establishment of the office after conducting a survey of black faculty and staff members.

The survey found that 60 percent of respondents indicated a feeling of racism in their offices or departments.

Lewis, now an economist working with a Washington, D.C., management consulting firm, testified at a hearing into the Department of Education's attempt to cut off federal funds to the UNC system because of failure to remove alleged vestiges of racial segregation.

Study says risk from pill "negligible"

PHILADELPHIA (AP)—The risks to women from birth control pills are "negligible," and diseases previously linked to them may actually be related to such things as smoking, drinking, the number of one's sexual partners and even sunbathing, according to a new study.

The 10-year study, conducted by the Kaiser-Permanente Medical Center in California under an $8 million grant from the National Institutes of Health, was released Tuesday, the 20th anniversary of the date the pill was first put on the market in this country.
