relocate. The money she received for her home appraisal and her relocations funds would help pay for the new dwelling Hooper said.

Chapel Hill Town Manager Gene Shipman said that it is legal to condemn the property of a resident who will not concede the land. He said the law is a part of local and state powers known as eminent domain.

Smith said he opposed taking the Gattis land because he believed that Gattis had not been given enough information about the move. He said he had not been to talk to her, because her lawyer, James Farlow, had made it clear that the situation would be discussed only through him.

"Nobody has been able to communicate with her," Smith said. "I was hoping she would find out what she would receive as a resident of relocation. I have a feeling she would probably move."

Hooper, however, disagreed with Smith in saying he thought adequate information had been given to Gattis. He said the Chapel Hill town attorney, had been unable to achieve successful negotiation with Farlow.

"He (Farlow) has not returned

(Denny's) calls," Town Council member Bill Thorpe said. "He has not represented her as well as I think he should have."

The only alternative other than the condemnation resolution would have been to extend the street around the Gattis house, Thorpe said. He explained that this alternative would have allowed the existing danger to continue.

To the outsider, Thorpe admitted the situation looked insensitive on the town's part.

"That's not the situation," Thorpe said. "I would have been the first to holler over (that). I wouldn't approve anything until I felt sure that (we wouldn't be taking advantage of her)."

Pence criticized the debate and its participants. "I was disappointed in the use of absolutely pedestrian language by Carter and Reagan," he said.

The debate gave the country a good chance to judge both candidates without slick advertising, but the event produced no real debate, Pence said. "I do not think either (candidate), was trying to show his points were sounder, as a true debate should," Pence said.

"Each man came prepared to state his position and avoid a gaffe that would cause Walter Cronkite to cluck. I'll settle for a zero-to-zero tie," he said.

consistently making as much contact as we can outside of arts and sciences to influence the curriculum," Tulchin said.

One Latin American Studies major said the curriculum's recent honor came as no shock to her. "I was pleasantly surprised," said Cynthia Trumbower, a senior anthropology and Latin American studies major. "I think we've got a really good department here."

She said she transferred to UNC from North Carolina State University as an anthropology major, but became interested in Latin American studies after she visited Mexico during the summer of 1979.

She was impressed, she said, by the faculty and understood why the curriculum received the honor. "They seem to be some of the most successful and willing to help people that I have encountered at the University, either here or North Carolina State University, and they're people that take their work seriously," Trumbower said.

"I feel very lucky," said Virginia Chambers, another senior Latin American studies and anthropology major.

Although she has not decided on any field, she said she planned to live and work in Latin America. She worked in Mexico this past summer on a grant from the curriculum, and works in the Latin American Bibliographic Center in Wilson Library.

"I think that probably the department will grow," she said. "It's imminent because Latin America is becoming more important to us. It's an oil source."

News In Brief

Human error blamed for Atlanta explosion

ATLANTA (AP)—Human error was to blame for a boiler explosion at a housing project day-care center that claimed the lives of four children and a teacher, according to a police report released Wednesday.

The report blamed the Oct. 13 explosion in part on the rewiring of a safety device designed to shut off the boiler when water was too low, and in part on the fact that the boiler was lit by "inadequately trained personnel."

The report, released by Atlanta Public Safety Commissioner Lee Brown, said investigators concluded "absolutely no foul play" was involved.

The fatal explosion aggravated racial tension in this city already edgy over the slayings of 10 black children and the disappearances of four others.

Pope issues new celibacy guidelines

VATICAN CITY (AP)—Pope John Paul II, ending a two-year freeze on granting dispensation from vows of priestly celibacy, has issued new guidelines to allow Roman Catholic priests to leave the priesthood and marry but still remain in the church.

The decision removes a major source of tension in the church created by the pope's refusal to process almost 5,000 petitions on file from priests seeking release from their vows, Vatican sources said.

The celibacy rule is believed to be a main reason behind the sharp increase in the defections of Roman Catholic priests in recent years.

Nixon testifies on intelligence break-ins

WASHINGTON (AP)—Former President Richard M. Nixon testified in court Wednesday that the director of the FBI had direct authority from the president to conduct warrantless break-ins in foreign intelligence cases that were important to national security.

Testifying at the trial of two former FBI officials accused of illegally authorizing break-ins, Nixon said, "It was my understanding that in matters of foreign intelligence the line went directly from the president to Mr. (J. Edgar) Hoover."

Later, Nixon said that same authority was in effect in 1972 and 1973 when L. Patrick Gray III was acting director of the FBI and warrantless searches were conducted at residences of friends and relatives of radical Weather Underground fugitives.

New twist in Klan trial

GREENSBORO (AP)—Defense lawyers focused Wednesday on two potential witnesses who were not called—a federal agent and a police informer—during closing arguments in the first-degree murder trial of six Ku Klux Klansmen and Nazis.

The six are each charged with five counts of first-degree murder arising from a bloody confrontation between a caravan of Klansmen and Nazis and a group of Communist Workers Party demonstrators last Nov. 3.

Five Communists died in the battle, which was fought with sticks and guns.

Lawyer Robert Douglas said federal agent Bernie Butkovich did not testify during the lengthy trial either because he knew no violence was planned or because the government participated in events leading to the shootout.

Douglas recalled testimony that Butkovich infiltrated a Forsyth County Nazi group and may have attended a planning session two days before the shootout in Greensboro.

But Butkovich never testified, Douglas said, because the Nazis had not been planning violence. "That is the only implications of Butkovich's failure to testify for the state," Douglas said.

"If you don't believe that, then there's only one thing left, and that's that the government participated in this," Douglas said.

Wins on Campus. You can too

Win A Stereo For a Weekend Party

This summer we gave away 4 pair of ESS loudspeakers. This fall you can win a complete stereo for a weekend party. We're going to supply a stereo system for 12 parties. If you want to have great music for a weekend party, get your friends to sign your guest list to help you win. We're giving away 4 parties for 50-100 people, 4 fraternity size parties for 100-200 people, and 4 giant parties for 250 up... whole dormitory size. We'll draw the winners of the first 3 parties in a couple of weeks, so get your guest list signed by as many people as you can hold... The bigger the list, the bigger the stereo system.

Bring your guest list to Vickers to qualify for the drawings and good luck!
