

Elephant Man

Broadway on Tour presents The Elephant Man at 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday with a matinee at 4 p.m. Saturday in Memorial Hall. Bernard Pomerance's Tony-Award winning drama is based on the actual story of John Merrick, a Victorian Englishman who suffered from a horrible disease that gradually took over most of his body.

'Male Animal' satirizes the intellectual man

When James Thurber and Eliot Nugent wrote The Male Animal in 1940, the play was topical as well as funny. The current production by the Gallery Theatre of the Carboro Art School has lost the punch of the original, but it remains entertaining.

Theater

The Male Animal centers on Tommy Turner, an unimposing, befuddled English professor who epitomizes the spineless, weak-kneed males common to Thurber's cartoons. Tommy is the stereotypical impotent intellectual, with more regard for poetry and books than for such matters as football games.

Tommy has been married for ten years to Ellen, and he is enjoying an existence as a Midwestern university professor. But this lifestyle is the calm before the storm.

Joe Ferguson, the aged ex-football hero of the university and an old flame of Ellen's, returns for the big Michigan game. And Tommy, with all his meekness, is forced to compete for his wife with the brawny ex-football hero.

Tommy also becomes the center of an academic controversy. Michael Barnes, the school literary magazine editor, has written an editorial calling the board of trustees fascists and commending Tommy for a decision to read a letter by Vanzetti to one of his English classes. Tommy is about to be fired in an outbreak of Red-hunting, and only a denial will save him.

Michael is suspended from school for writing the editorial, and he and Tommy attempt to drown their sorrows in drink. After musing about the male animal, Tommy decides to fight Joe for his wife and refuses to deny that he will read the Vanzetti letter.

Fred Michael has some nice moments as Tommy, but he does not give the role the satiric bite that it deserves. The evolution from scrawny professor to male animal lacks the contrast necessary for its effectiveness. As his wife, Ellen, Ann Liske could also benefit from greater variety in her interpretation of the character. Liske does not show the dilemma of her choice between the extremes of the intellectual Tommy and the muscular Joe.

The supporting characters provide much of the humor in the production. Although he has not quite mastered the theatrical conventions, Tom Shetley combines just the right amount of pomposity and silliness to make the head of the board of trustees hilarious.

Stan Lichtenstein is also enjoyable as the dean who tries to keep a low profile in the academic freedom controversy by voting to "read nothing to his classes that was written later than the first half of the seventeenth century."

The youngsters' performances are also good, though somewhat uneven. Kevin Coffey is wonderful as the young football player who idolizes Joe. Sybil Thronton plays a likeable ingenue, but Peter Hardy is not quite volatile enough to play a believable Michael Barnes. Pamela Perkins is deliciously sassy as the maid, Cleota.

The setting by John Thomas satisfies expectations for a comfortable, cluttered professor's home.

William Hardy's direction of the production shows a thorough knowledge of Thurber convention. Each of the characters suggests one of Thurber's cartoons in animated form. But what is missing from the current production, is the vaudeville element. And the production misses some of the pointedness of Thurber and Nugent's satire on intellectuals. What does come across is satisfying, light-hearted comedy.

The Male Animal is performed at 8 p.m. Friday through Sunday in the Art School. For ticket information call 942-2041.
