

Library installs security system

By JED AVERY
Staff Writer

Last year UNC's undergraduate library lost 1,000 books worth approximately $15,000 to $20,000, but recently, library officials installed an electronic detection system in an effort to prevent further losses. The new system is expected to cut the losses by 75 percent.

The system, which replaced last semester's book checkers, cost an estimated $35,000, librarian David Taylor said Wednesday.

Devices were placed in more than half the books in the library's circulation so that if someone tried to remove a book from the library without checking it out, a beeping noise would sound. The device causing the noise is not visible in the books. Taylor would not explain how they worked because of security.

The Health Services Library already has the system and the new library also will have one installed. The system is not feasible for Wilson Library because devices would have to be put in a million books, librarian Larry Alford said.

Published studies of the device indicated a 60-90 percent reduction in book losses with its use, Taylor said.

Taylor said the system created a different atmosphere. "We're not having to search students as they leave," he said.

Security gates in undergraduate library ...could cut book losses by 75 percent

Students in the library Wednesday agreed with Taylor. "It's much, much better than the old system," said junior Vicky Foxworth. "I had this at my old school (in New York) before I transferred here. It worked there." Beryl McLaughlin, a former book checker, said the device was an excellent idea. "I know how much I hated going through a person's bag."

'Yack' delivery delayed again

By ROANN BISHOP
Staff Writer

The 1980 Yackety Yack seems to be suffering from the same fate that struck the 1979 Yack—tardiness. Originally scheduled to arrive sometime during the Christmas holidays, the book was to have been delivered this week.

However, several factors have prevented delivery and thus the distribution of the book to the students. One factor has been the long dispute between the '79 Yack staff, headed by Editor Chrisann Ohler and the Hunter Publishing Company of Winston-Salem.

The dispute involved the quality of printing and the binding of the 1979 Yackety Yack. Ohler claimed that Hunter had violated four areas of its contract with the Yack and had delivered a book which failed to meet the quality standards of the Yack staff.

After threat of a lawsuit, the '79 Yack arrived on campus and was distributed to students in late February of 1980, four months past the original deadline. Mary Beth Searle, editor of the '80 Yack, said the reason for the present delay was the result of personal sickness. She also said the holiday closing of the plant had reduced publishing time.

Bob Donnan, a photographer for the '80 Yack, said that parts of the book had been redone during the final checking procedure—in an attempt to make the book even better.

Donnan stressed that relations with Hunter had been extremely good this year. However, the contract for the '81 Yack, under the editorship of Cathy Robinson, has been switched to Taylor Publishing Company of Dallas, Texas.

Searle said the staff was to receive comprehensive profits from the company Thursday and that the tentative date for delivery and distribution to students would be late January or early February.

However, in the future, Searle said spring distribution of the Yack may become a permanent arrangement.

"In the future, the Yack may be forced to compromise its past award-winning standards or else face a spring delivery date if students continue to wait until delivery of the book is delayed to take an interest in the problems," Searle said.

But while the tardiness of the book aroused the ire of some students last spring, students seemed to be taking the delay of the '80 Yack in stride.

"I worked for my high school yearbook and I can understand the problems that they must be having," said senior Sandra Howell. "I'm sure that the staff is doing everything they can to see that the students get the yearbook as soon as possible."

Howell said she had bought a '79 Yack but had failed to purchase an '80 Yack because she waited too late.

However, senior William Owen said that the late delivery of the '79 Yack had been the main reason that he hadn't bought a '80 Yack.

ARA increases food prices

Students returning from Christmas break may have been a little shocked when they pulled out their $1 for a cheeseburger and a small Coke at Fast Break in the Carolina Union expecting to get that treasured $.01 change, only to have the cashier respond with, "That will be 9 more cents, please."

ARA dining services increased its prices over the break and made a few other changes in its services.

Daniel E. Ramage, director of the dining service, said price increases were made on selected entrees, selected salads and selected vegetables but portion sizes had not changed.

"Across the board, we're probably talking 4 percent of an increase in prices," he said. Ramage said a lot of the prices remained the same, such as some vegetables and entrees. In Fast Break, soft drink prices increased $.10 and cheeseburgers went up $.05, but the price of the hamburger stayed the same.

Ramage attributed the price changes to general increases in food prices and wages. For instance, the minimum wage went up from $3.10 to $3.35 Jan. 1 and the increase, he said, affected the service's food prices. Also, unexpected events, such as the cold snap in Florida this week which harmed the orange harvest, affected food prices, he said.

One change in Fast Break was the addition of a third drink size. There is now a nine-ounce, 12-ounce and 16-ounce drink size," Ramage said. "Prior to that, we offered only 12- and 16-ounce."

Also, in Chase cafeteria, portion sizes were increased and students can now serve themselves their own vegetables. Chase also added an 18-item salad bar for dinner. The price for dinner in Chase went up from $3.49 to $3.80.

In the Pine Room items such as carved-on-the-line roast beef, and ham and London Broil will be added throughout the semester. The items are limited to the board plans.

Ramage said the price changes did not affect the board plans right now.

This was ARA's first price increase since it began last May. Ramage said the next price changes would probably be sometime after the spring semester prior to the 1981 summer of fall sessions. But Ramage said he expected the next price increase to be, "as far away from now as possible."

UNC groups plan speeches, vigil to commemorate King's birthday

Various campus organizations will sponsor ceremonies today, in support of national and state efforts commemorating the 52nd birthday of slain civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr.

A silent vigil, sponsored by the Rally for Justice Committee, will be held in the Pit at noon, said Bob Saunders, student body president and committee member. A brief speech honoring King will precede 10-15 minutes of silence.

Also, the School of Public Health will have its third annual ceremony honoring King in the auditorium of Rosenau Hall at 4 p.m. This year's guest speaker will be C. Eric Lincoln, professor of religion and culture at Duke University.

Assistant Dean William Small said the idea to have a ceremony came about through the efforts of the Minority Student Caucus and the dean of the School of Public Health and Lewis Roland, assistant to the chairman of the department of maternal and child health.

"King was a public health worker in a way," Small said. "He had a lot to do in effecting social justice and social change. Public health workers are about all of this."

Small said the ceremony would emphasize the fact that Dr. King's "dream for equality" was still alive. He anticipated an audience of 100-200 people.

"This is a difficult time with classes just starting. We may not get much from the other parts of campus, but everyone is welcomed," he said.

In addition to Lincoln, the speakers will include B.G. Greenberg, dean of the School of Public Health and several students from the school. A reception will follow the program.

The Black Student Movement and the Carolina Union will sponsor a memorial service at 8:30 p.m. in Great Hall. Originated by the Morrison Action Committee, the service will commemorate the life and work of Dr. King, said Smith Turner, BSM coordinator of the event.

"We thought we should honor him on his birthday in some manner," he said.

Harold Wallace, vice chancellor of University Affairs, will deliver the keynote address. Also included in the service will be Mark Canady, BSM chairperson; Bob Saunders, student body president; Hayden B. Renwick, associate dean of arts and sciences; BSM Gospel Choir; Ebony readers; and other students and area ministers.

Nationally, there will be a march to Washington to support efforts to have King's birthday declared a national holiday. The march is sponsored by Stevie Wonder who will cover the costs by giving a benefit concert Friday.

In North Carolina, the mayor of Winston-Salem declared today a holiday for the city, and two radio stations in Greensboro sponsored an essay contest, in which some UNC students entered, on why King's birthday should be a national holiday. Winners of the contest received an all-expense paid trip to Washington to attend the march and the concert.
