

WXYC to broadcast Schlafly-Friedan debate

Betty Friedan

By LINDA ROBERTSON
Staff Writer

Phyllis Schlafly and Betty Friedan meet tonight at 8 to debate the Equal Rights Amendment. The event is sponsored by the Forum Committee of the Carolina Union and the Association for Women Students.

Although the debate is sold out, campus radio station WXYC will broadcast it live.

Both women have spoken on and written numerous articles about the controversial proposed amendment.

Betty Friedan will take the pro-ERA side. She is an advocate of women's rights and founded the National Organization of Women (NOW) in 1966.

Friedan has written articles for Harper's, Saturday Review, the New York Times, Ladies' Home Journal and Ms. She is also author of The Feminine Mystique and It Changed My Life.

Friedan has taught at various educational institutions and was visiting professor of sociology at Yale and Temple universities.

Phyllis Schlafly will argue against the ERA in the debate. She is chairperson of the national Stop ERA organization and has played an active role in lobbying state legislatures.

Schlafly is a syndicated columnist and has written on such topics as "Do We Want a Gender Free Society?" and "Is the Family an Endangered Species?"

She is author of nine books, including The Power of the Positive Woman.

Schlafly graduated Phi Beta Kappa from Washington University in St. Louis and received her M.A. from Harvard in 1945 and her law degree from Washington University Law School in 1978.

City police building to be finished

By SHARON DARLING
Staff Writer

Construction of the new $1 million Chapel Hill Police Department building on Airport Road should be completed next month, Ben Callahan, administrative assistant to police Chief Herman Stone, said last week. The police staff probably will not move in until April, though, he said.

Callahan said the new building was needed because "we're a little bit big for what we've got — the facilities are totally inadequate for what we need — there's no room for growth." Money for the building was raised through a bond referendum passed in 1976.

The present police building on Columbia and Rosemary streets will revert to town ownership when the police move out. The building, built under President Franklin D. Roosevelt's public works program in 1939, has been police headquarters since 1941.

The new building will include a training room and physical fitness center. All new Chapel Hill police officers now have to be sent away for training.

"Hopefully it will encourage people to come here (to join the police force) because it's a modern facility," Callahan said.

The only thing there won't be very much room for in the new building is prisoners. The new facility, just like the old one, will have only two four-person cells.

The new building will have a separate cell for women in it, however. Now all women prisoners are transferred to Durham because the Chapel Hill Police Department has no place to hold them.

The local jail is a holding facility for people arrested by the Chapel Hill Police Department. These prisoners usually are held for less than eight hours, until they can be released on bond or taken to the county jail in Hillsborough, Callahan said.

"The holding facility is for convenience sake only," he said. "If we have problems we take them to Hillsborough."

The new police building was designed to take advantage of passive solar energy, although it is too big to be totally heated and cooled by the sun, Callahan said.

The front of the building is two stories high, with glass all the way across. On the back side, one floor is underground to conserve energy.

The new building's additional office space will allow the police department to expand and add more personnel, Callahan said.

The Chapel Hill Police Department isn't the only local law enforcement agency suffering from growing pains. Renovations are scheduled to begin in about two weeks on the Orange County jail in Hillsborough.
