

Bradley still hard at work

There are very few people who spend more time around Boshamer Stadium than UNC baseball coach Mike Roberts, but even Roberts gave up trying to stay around as long as Scott Bradley.

"He spends so much time here that I finally had to give him a key his freshman year, because I have a family to get home to," Roberts said.

Even now, after his sophomore year in which Bradley has broken more records than clumsy clerks at album stores, the Essex Falls, N.J., native still works at the game he loves. The extra time spent fielding ground balls, all the time spent taking batting practice, the efforts he has made to get in better shape and increase his speed — all that time — is probably the reason Scott Bradley might be the best player in college baseball.

What makes Bradley work so hard?

David Poole

"I just like baseball so much," Bradley said. "I'd like to be able to continue in baseball as long as possible. I want to be able to look back when it's over and say, 'I did everything I possibly could to make it.'"

"I don't want to be able to look back and say that if I had worked a little harder, I could have made it."

Bradley's work paid off in 1980 when he was named Player-of-the-Year in the Atlantic Coast Conference. He played in 36 games, had 249 at bats, scored 59 runs, had 96 hits, hit 22 doubles, drove in 63 runs and had 152 total bases. All of those were school records.

The 96 hits, 22 doubles and his consecutive game hitting streak of 30 games were ACC records and Bradley, after two seasons, is already third on the all-time UNC list in hits, runs batted in and runs scored.

It's a scary prospect, but Bradley is likely to be better this year. He played this summer in the Cape Cod League and traveled with the United States team to a world tournament in Japan.

And ever since he last trotted off the field in 1980, he's been working at his game.

"Scott wants to be a better total ball player," Roberts said. "He has worked very hard on his speed and he is in the best shape ever."

"I played with and against some real good players," Bradley said. "When you play against people who are better than you are, you have to get better."

Bradley was as disappointed as the rest of the 1980 team when the Tar Heels failed to secure an NCAA tournament bid. He thinks that the disappointment will make the team realize how important each game in a long season can be in the overall scheme of things.

"It makes us want to work harder," Bradley said. "Everybody realizes how every game — in the end — can mean something. We have to go out and do our best to win every day."

Though Bradley played third base almost all of last year, he said he would have to do some catching this year to spell freshman starter Todd Wilkinson. "It doesn't bother me," Bradley said. "I caught my freshman year and catching is kind of like riding a bicycle — once you know how to do it you don't forget it."

Bradley's strong suit, though, is hitting. At 5-11, 170 pounds, he's not an overpowering figure to look at. But after you've seen him hit the ball a few times, you can't help but be impressed.

Bradley got the most attention last season during his consecutive game streak which ended in the opening round of the ACC tournament. The attention brought a lot of concern to fans and members of the media, but Bradley wasn't that concerned.

"Every time you go up to the plate, you go up to get a hit. If you don't, you're in a lot of trouble to begin with," Bradley said. "I just had a lot of balls fall in."

"I don't guess at the plate, I just wait for the pitch and react to it," he said. "If you hit the ball hard somewhere, it'll find the holes. It's just a matter of putting the ball in play."

Scott Bradley makes home run trot ...says he's ready for '81 season

Bradley's junior season begins today when the Tar Heels travel to Jacksonville, Fla., to open a 54-game regular season schedule. He's got a tough act to follow, having made second-team All-America as a sophomore. He'll spend a lot of after-game hours talking with scouts this year. But none of that is on his mind right now.

"I've been looking forward to the beginning of the season for a while," Bradley said. "I just want to be able to play in an NCAA tournament and see how well we can do, and maybe even get to the College World Series at Omaha."

And Scott Bradley knows how to get to Omaha. It's the same way the violinist in an old joke is told how to get to Carnegie Hall.

Practice, practice, practice.

Indoor mile record special for Radford

By STEVE STENERSEN
Staff Writer

With more honors under her belt than most athletes hope to get in an entire career, women's track standout Nancy Radford is hardly a stranger to success. But the Salem, Va., native will be the first to tell you that she has not done it alone.

"Without my faith through my commitment to God, I wouldn't be where I am now," she said. "If you can build your faith level up enough, you can do anything you set your mind to."

Clearly, no one can argue with her motivation techniques. In just 2 1/2 years at Carolina, Radford has set school records in the outdoor 1,500 meters, 3,000 meters and 5,000 meters; she shares the records in the distance medley relay and the two-mile relay with her teammates.

Recently Radford became the first woman in Carolina history to run the indoor mile in under five minutes — she's done that twice.

Radford's record mile run is one of the best moments of her life. "I'll never forget it," she said. "But, I expected to do it that day. I felt that I was ready for it," Radford added.

Coach Joe Hilton is impressed with Radford, the first woman recruited to run the mile at UNC. "She's the best we've had in that area, and she's making continued improvement," he said. "She encourages the other athletes to work by showing them that high goals are attainable."

Although Radford has attained many honors, she does not approach her career by concentrating on individual goals. "I've always wanted to be the best, in all my life," she said. "I feel that if I focus on being the best, all of the smaller, individual goals will fall into place."

Radford's interest in running goes back to grade school. "I used to race and beat most of the boys in my class. Then one day, my high school coach came up to me and asked if I would come out for track," she said.

From that point, Radford became the best women's runner in her area. As a senior, she was a blue chip recruit and chose UNC over many other schools for one simple reason. "I came here because Carolina sold itself. I was offered scholarships at other schools, but I just fell for the people and lifestyle of Chapel Hill," she said.

As far as this year's team is concerned, Radford sees it as the strongest team yet. "I'm excited," Radford said. "Each year, the team and the entire women's program gets better and better."

"Although there is a tendency for individualism in track, we are a very close team. We all get along great and genuinely care about each other."

Though many years are focusing on Radford as this year's track season gets into full swing, she said winning in track was a team effort.

"The runners who get the seconds and thirds are just as important, if not more important, to our wins as the people who get firsts," she said. "Any effort we make is always a team effort."
