Children now listed stable

Two children who were in critical condition last week after being hit by a car Wednesday were listed in stable condition at North Carolina Memorial Hospital Sunday.

NCMH information officer James Bicket said there had been little improvement in their condition during the 24-hour period from Saturday until Sunday.

The children, Christopher Kilpatrick, 10, and Lance Badgett, 8, were taken off the critical list Friday.

They were hit while watching a Budweiser Clydesdale exhibition at University Mall. Kilpatrick suffered head injuries and a broken leg, and Badgett had chest injuries, a broken arm and a broken leg, Bicket said.

Erica Kendall, 6, who was also struck by the car, was listed in fair-to-good condition Sunday. She had a broken pelvis.

Five other people were taken to NCMH following the accident Wednesday but all had been released by Sunday.

Chapel Hill Police Chief Herman Stone said the car's accelerator apparently got stuck as it pulled from a parking space near the exhibition. The car, a 1972 Buick, was driven by Mildred Cheek Cox of Chapel Hill. It struck at least ten people, one witness said.

Two of the Clydesdale horses were injured but not seriously.

No charges had been filed Sunday, but the case was still under investigation by the Chapel Hill Police Department.
