Freshman Matt Doherty shoots in Carolina's West regional victory over Kansas State ... Heels will play Virginia in national semifinals in Philadelphia Saturday.

Heels win West, to play Virginia

By DAVID POOLE
Staff Writer

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah — Kansas State was expected to play cat and mouse with North Carolina in the finals of the NCAA West Regional here Saturday, but the Wildcats' zone defense looked like Swiss cheese as the Tar Heels won an easy 82-68 victory to advance to the Final Four this weekend in Philadelphia.

"There were holes just as big as ever in their zone," James Worthy said. "I didn't think it would be that easy getting the ball inside."

The Tar Heels got the ball inside almost at will during the game's key moments, and the Carolina front line combined for 52 points and 32 rebounds. Senior Al Wood led the Carolina attack with 21 points and 17 rebounds and was named the regional's most outstanding player.

The victory moves North Carolina to the national semifinals Saturday against a familiar foe, the University of Virginia Cavaliers, in the Spectrum. It will be the sixth trip for UNC coach Dean Smith teams to the Final Four and the first since 1977.

"I've been pretty disappointed sitting at home at the end of March watching other teams play on national television," Wood said.

Smith said, "I think we played one of the best, if not the best, games we've played all year. I'm happy for the senior class. Everybody who has been to UNC now for a long time has been to the Final Four."

The Tar Heels were in control of the regional finals throughout. Kansas State had been expected to try to control the tempo, but failed, leading for the last time at 6-5 very early in the game.

The Tar Heels took off on a 16-8 run and had a 26-16 lead with eight minutes left in the first half. The Wildcats' one rally got them within three at 30-27 before another 12-2 Tar Heel spurt — capped by a three-point play on a stuff by Sam Perkins that surely will make the highlight film — gave Carolina a 42-29 margin at the half.

The Tar Heels suffered no second half letdown and KSU got no closer than nine for the rest of the game. That came at 69-60 with less than four minutes left and again at 71-62 with just more than three minutes left. But two free throws by Jimmy Black and two free throws and a slam dunk by James Worthy extended the margin to 77-62. The outcome was no longer any doubt.

To a man, the Tar Heels credited unselfish play for their success in the NCAA tournament so far.

"When you get down to this point, it's not a one-on-one show," Wood said. "We have a lot of unselfish players, and that's why we've come this far."

Smith said, "The whole team is playing well together. There has been a lot of talk about the front line, but the whole team is executing well."

A glance at the boxscore shows that balance was the key for Carolina. Behind Wood's 21 points came Perkins and Matt Doherty, who had 16 points each. Worthy had 15 points. Perkins had 11 rebounds, Worthy had five assists, and Doherty had five rebounds, three assists and two steals in what was probably his finest game as a Tar Heel.

"I thought Al Wood had a tremendous tournament," Smith said. "I also have to give credit to James Worthy. Since halftime of the Wake Forest game in the Atlantic Coast Conference tournament, he has played the best basketball of his career."

Wood and Worthy were joined by Perkins on the all-tournament team. The other members were Rolando Blackman and Ed Neely of Kansas State. Blackman led the Wildcats on Saturday with 21 points. Randy Reed scored 19, and Neely had 12.

"We knew in October that we had the potential to go just as far as anybody else," Worthy said. "It's just a matter of working hard. We have worked our guts out over the months and this is the result."

"We just realized that if we got out and worked real hard and played together as a team we could go a long way."

"In the past years it seems the team that has won the national championship has had the momentum at the right time and who has had a little luck and avoided the injuries. We've been able to do that through the tournament."

Indiana easily defeated St. Josephs Sunday 78-46 to take the Midwest crown. The Hoosiers head to Philadelphia to face Louisiana State Saturday. LSU defeated Wichita State 96-85 Sunday to win the Midwest regional.

Even with all the upsets during the tournament, four of the nation's top ten teams — LSU, Indiana, Virginia, North Carolina — will compete for the national title.

Ticket sign-up planned

Sign-up for student tickets for the National Collegiate Athletic Association semifinal game between the UNC Tar Heels and the University of Virginia Cavaliers is scheduled for 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. today at the ticket office in Carmichael Auditorium.

Students must present a UNC ID and an athletic pass to sign up. The drawing of the lists of names will be held at 5 p.m., and the names chosen will be posted afterward.

UNC students have been allotted 300 tickets. Forty of those are reserved for the UNC Pep Band.

The game will be played Saturday night in the Philadelphia Spectrum.

Faculty council proposes increase in UNC tuition

By MARK SCHOEN

Students in the 16-member University of North Carolina system may face a 15 percent tuition increase this fall.

UNC President William C. Friday told the UNC Faculty Council Friday that the N.C. General Assembly base budget committee had proposed an additional 4 percent tuition increase over the 11 percent initially suggested by the UNC Board of Governors.

Friday said Sunday that the base budget committee's recommendation "will undergo intensive debate" in the General Assembly.

The committee also has recommended that N.C. State University's agricultural experiment station and extension service, which costs $2 million a year to fund, be eliminated and that a larger proportion of N.C. Memorial Hospital's revenue be funded by patient receipts, Friday said. Additional recommendations from the committee are a 6 percent cut in all requests made by the Board of Governors, proposals to reduce the faculty/student ratio at a maximum savings of $21.2 million and an increase in graduate student fees.

Friday told the Faculty Council that he did not think the state legislature would try to strengthen the budget by reducing faculty appointments.

Friday said the proposed additional tuition increase, the change in the faculty/student ratio and the abandonment of the agricultural programs at N.C. State University would be "destructive" and have a "crippling effect" on the UNC system.

In a report on the proposal for a University airport, John L. Temple, vice chancellor for business and finance, said he did not think it was the University's responsibility to build another airport to serve the Chapel Hill area. The need for a hangar to house medical air operations for N.C. Memorial Hospital raised the question of a University airport.

In its annual report to the council, the Committee on the Status and Recruitment of Black Faculty recommended that discussions by deans regarding research and teaching expectations should be carefully explained to all members to ensure a fair opportunity for both blacks and whites.

The Committee on the Status of Women reported that an effort should be made to provide equal benefits, treatments, services and opportunities for both male and female athletes.

Board of Governors

Desegregation case discussed

By MONICA MALPASS

The University of North Carolina System President William C. Friday and the UNC Board of Governors met Friday in Raleigh to discuss new developments in the desegregation case with the U.S. Department of Education.

Friday's report to the BOG on the case included summaries of testimony by witnesses of recent days.

Felix Joyner, vice president of finance at UNC, will testify today about financial and budget policies at the system's predominantly black institutions since 1972.

The DOE alleges that UNC has failed to remove signs of racial segregation and threatens to cut off $100 million in federal aid.

Donald K. Smith, former senior vice president at the University of Wisconsin, testified last week that a federal plan to increase minority presence at UNC schools was "bizarre and disheartening" and that UNC's plan is "wise, judicious and working."

The focus of discussion was a 1979-1980 study which suggested that educational programs be shifted between UNC's predominantly black and white institutions to improve racial integration.

Smith said the plan showed a lack of understanding about why students pick a certain university. He also said the plan would disrupt the university system, causing faculty morale to fall and student access to the schools to be limited.

In earlier testimony, architect Albert L. Haskins said buildings on white campuses in North Carolina are generally in better condition than buildings on black campuses. He added that $40 million in special appropriations for renovations at traditionally black institutions would considerably improve the schools.

The special appropriations would leave both white and black schools with some unmet needs, but the difference between those needs would be negligible, Haskins said.

In the board's executive session, Friday said Chancellor Joab Thomas of N.C. State University was considering an offer to be president at the University of Alabama.

Thomas is scheduled to visit Tuscaloosa, Ala., today for an interview.

Thomas, a native of Alabama, was assistant professor of biology and vice president of the University of Tuscaloosa until 1976, when he accepted the chancellorship at N.C. State.

A University of Alabama trustee who is on the school's search committee said Thomas was the leading candidate for the post. He also said the committee would offer the job to Thomas on Monday.

Elections

Court denies senior class appeal

By MELODEE ALVES

The Student Supreme Court upheld the election of John Goodwin and Carol Zielinski as senior class president and vice president by a 4-1 vote Sunday.

Candidates Joey Hoyle, Bill Carlton and Brenny Thompson had appealed last month's election. Hoyle had contended that the misspelling and placement of his name on the ballot were sufficient basis for a new election.

"It was an appropriate decision given the laws that the court has to operate under," said Student Attorney General Mark Carpenter, who represented Goodwin, Zielinski and the elections board. "I think that there should be some changes in the election laws and the Student Constitution to ensure that these types of errors don't happen again."

The Court ruled against Hoyle according to statutory law because he failed to overcome his burden of proof — that the misspelling of his name on the ballot and the misinformation of his position on the ballot had a definite effect on the outcome of the election.

"I think that the statute is a good statute," Chief Justice Roy Cooper said. "It allows the Supreme Court to balance all the factors in the case and come to a decision."

Cooper said the misspelling of Hoyle's name on the ballot was a violation of the election laws but that the court decided that the defense successfully proved that the error had no effect on the election.

The court also decided that Elections Board Chairperson Gregg James' error in informing Hoyle that he was first on the ballot was an election irregularity covered in the laws.

"It's true that we couldn't overcome our burden of proof by any other means that the violation of the sanctity of private ballot," Hoyle said. "We didn't appeal with malice and we didn't want to hold the class back. We gave it our best shot."

Carpenter recommended that ballots be printed one week before the election and that candidates view the ballots for corrections. In addition, Cooper said that the Campus Governing Council should look into inconsistent errors in the laws.

"When cases come to the Supreme Court, there is very little room for remedies," he said. "You either throw out the entire results of election day or you don't. These are the options the court faces."

Cooper praised both parties for their conduct during the hearing and commended the Elections Board for running a smoother election than in the past.
