Cane Creek reservoir OK'd, but fight still on

By SPEED HALLMAN

The Orange Water and Sewer Authority has voted to accept a federal permit authorizing them to build a reservoir dam on Cane Creek, but the project has been delayed by a citizens' group opposing the project.

The dam, to be built on the Cane Creek in Bingham Township, would create a 10-million-gallon-a-day reservoir that would flood 480 acres in the Cane Creek community and reserve 258 more acres for a buffer area. The Cane Creek Conservation Authority opposes the Army Corps of Engineers project.

OWASA board member Eddie Mann cast the single dissenting vote in the 7-1 decision to accept the permit. "I was appointed by the county commissioners to serve on the OWASA board because I live in the Cane Creek area," Mann said. "We never have had a vote on Cane Creek, and this is the first chance I've had to cast a vote for or against (it). I should be a representative of the community."

The Corps of Engineers, which decides who can impound a body of water, ruled in favor of OWASA and granted a permit for the dam to the State of North Carolina.

The N.C. Environmental Management Commission, which bestows the authority of eminent domain, or the power to impound land, granted a permit to OWASA which the Cane Creek Conservation Authority challenged in court. The state appellate court ruled that the EMC had not sufficiently considered the environmental impact of the project. The state now has to decide whether to give OWASA permission to take over the necessary land for the project. "This was a setback in terms of time," Mann said.

While the Cane Creek controversy continues, OWASA will have enough water to serve its customers, he said. OWASA pumps water from University Lake to supply the Chapel Hill-Carrboro area. The utility also may buy water from Hillsborough if necessary, and OWASA has purchased an old rock quarry west of Carrboro that has a 60-90 day storage capacity.

"We've had good rainfall this year," Mann said. "It looks like we'll get by another year."

Post office building to house district house

By LYNNE THOMSON

Local lawyers will find themselves in plush surroundings when the new district court facilities open in the post office building on Franklin Street in early August.

Chapel Hill has spent almost $600,000 in the purchase and renovation of the building, according to figures from the Chapel Hill Planning Department.

The new facilities will replace the district court's current location in the old police building on Rosemary Street.

A secretary from the district attorney's office said everyone was excited about the new facility because it would have more space and would be better furnished and decorated.

The new building brings luxuries like more space for the district attorney in the basement of the building and separate offices for the judge and the judge's secretary.

The court's presence will not affect the post office operations, said Post Master F.M. Reigher of Chapel Hill.

Since the post office acquired their facilities on Estes Drive, most of the Franklin Street building has been empty.

The renovation project is financed by bond sales approved in a 1978 referendum, by proceeds from the town's wastewater fund, interest on town deposits and budget funds appropriated for the project.

Chapel Hill planner Liz Rooks said renovators wanted to maintain the appearance of the 50-year-old building. They have found marble slabs in the basement to fill in the old postal windows and have replaced the fluorescent lights with the original fixtures, she said.

They also have preserved the mural on the wall of the lobby. Entitled "Laying of the Cornerstone," the mural was commissioned by the Works Project Administration in 1941.

A ramp for handicapped access in the front of the building and landscaping to improve drainage are also planned, Rooks said.

The district court serves the Chapel Hill-Carrboro area of District 15-B of North Carolina. District 15-B includes both Orange and Chatham counties, and has courts in both Hillsborough and Pittsboro as well as Chapel Hill.
