

Bids made for buses

The Town of Chapel Hill opened bidding last week for 12 new buses the town wants to buy to replace existing buses, said Bob Godding, Chapel Hill's director of transportation.

The North Carolina Public Transportation Advisory Council voted Aug. 4 to match a federal grant with state funds, providing the money for seven of the buses, Godding said.

The town had submitted an earlier request for federal funding (administered at the state level) for new buses, but Godding said only part of the request was approved.

To obtain the balance, the town submitted a request through another program at the federal level, which the federal government approved, Godding said.

The buses will be rolling "about a year from now," he said.

The Town of Chapel Hill will submit another request for funding for shelters at bus stops in Chapel Hill, Carrboro and on campus, Godding said. The shelters, if approved, will be at high passenger volume stops.

He said Chapel Hill received an additional $625,000 in federal operating assistance for public transit for the current fiscal year and has requested more for next year.

U.S. navy pilot claims Libyan planes shot first

The Associated Press

NAPLES, Italy — U.S. Navy pilot Henry Kleeman said Monday he knew it would "cause a ruckus" but he had no choice except to shoot down two Libyan warplanes over the Mediterranean.

One the Libyans fired at his jets, Kleeman said, "There was no chance that I was not going to pull the trigger."

The two Navy F-14s commanded by Kleeman downed two Libyan air force jets last Wednesday after, the Americans said, the Libyans fired a missile at them over disputed waters.

Kleeman, other officers involved and 6th Fleet commanders met with reporters Monday aboard the USS Nimitz after the nuclear-powered ship, home carrier for the F-14s, docked in the Bay of Naples.

The air battle occurred during an exercise in missile shooting by Nimitz planes last Tuesday and Wednesday in the southern Mediterranean. The war-games area included a part of the Gulf of Sidra claimed by Libya as its territory.

Some of the Libyan-claimed waters are 100 miles from the nearest Libyan shore. The United States recognizes only the traditional three-mile offshore territorial limit, and U.S. officials have said the 6th Fleet exercise was intended in part to demonstrate American rejection of the Libyan claim.

The first 39 times there was no problem, and the Libyans flew off, he said. The 40th time, however, one of a pair of Soviet-built Libyan SU-22s fired an Atoll heat-seeking missile and sparked the incident, the admiral said.

When asked why the Libyans suddenly opened fire, Rear Adm. James Service, commander of the war-games task force, said, "We didn't know what the reason was."
