

Spending cuts sought

Chapel Thrill plans progress

Negotiation with bands to play for the spring Chapel Thrill concert is expected to begin next month if the budget and plans made by the committee are approved by the Campus Governing Council, Student Body President Scott Norberg said this week.

"Early cooperation is hopefully going to put us where we can pre-schedule a band rather than trying to talk a band into adding Chapel Hill into their schedule," Norberg said, adding that he hoped this would give the committee more selections.

Chapel Thrill, an annual concert first held in 1979, was canceled last year because of problems with finding a band.

The Chapel Thrill budget is being readied for review by the CGC Finance Committee in the next few weeks, Norberg said. Chapel Thrill Chairman Wes Wright is looking into a few more ways to trim the budget before the presentation, he said.

The committee will request $125,000 to invest into the concert, which is the total amount of funds in the general surplus.

"It's such a big budget; there are so many large costs that we've been going back and back again to find every corner we can cut,"

Norberg said. "We need to reserve every dollar we can to be able to spend as much money on contracting the bands as we can."

Norberg said he had asked Wright to go back over the costs such as food, lights, sound and other band production expenses to compare how much high-caliber bands usually request.

One area in which Wright was able to save this year was in the cost of T-shirts.

"The last Chapel Thrill, we spent $3,000 to buy 2,000 T-shirts that raised about $9,000 in income," Norberg said.

"This year, we've been able to find two businesses to co-sponsor the cost of the T-shirts, which means we won't have to pay for any of it."

Some costs have gone up, including electricity and the cost of bands, he said.

Norberg said he had also been reconsidering the process of working with CGC. He said the professionals who helped with putting on the concert had complained in the past that CGC approval during crucial steps of the negotiating process hampered the work.

"I want to find out just how real those problems are," Norberg said.

Drakeford to run again

By KAREN HAYWOOD

Carrboro Mayor Robert W. Drakeford has announced that he will seek a third two-year term in what he said could be an exciting election Nov. 3.

Drakeford said he decided to run for re-election for three reasons.

There is a great need for continuity in the office of mayor, he said. Although much has been accomplished in Carrboro, "there are a lot of things that still have to be done," Drakeford also said that he thought he could still benefit the town.

"I have a record that you can shoot at, good or bad," he said.

Drakeford was on the Carrboro Board of Aldermen from 1975 to 1977 before being elected mayor.

Drakeford referred to charges that Carrboro was facing a funding crisis as "overblown political rhetoric by people who have (used) all kinds of scare tactics in the past."

"I don't think we're facing a funding crisis," he said. "In many ways, Carrboro is one of the most healthy towns in the Southeast."

The town has had a series of unexpected expenses this year, he said.

Drakeford said that Carrboro needed to broaden its tax base, which is small for a town of Carrboro's size.

That Carrboro has had only two tax increases in six years is evidence of fiscal responsibility, Drakeford said, adding that the Board of Aldermen needed to consider inflation more often when deciding on tax increases.

If there is a tax increase next year, it will probably not be the size of the increase enacted with the 1981-1982 budget that began July 1, he said.

Drakeford also said he had encouraged student and minority input on town boards and committees.

Eighty percent of the town's population lives in rental property, including students, faculty and University staff, he said.

Although Carrboro's permanent residents do not always understand, "those

Robert Drakeford

(University-related residents) are the people who are paying the bills," he said.

Drakeford said he wanted to thank the Board of Aldermen and the town's professional staff for its help.

"It's not just Bob Drakeford; it's a team of people," he said.

Wendy's drive-in gets approval

By RICHARD FLYNN

The Chapel Hill Planning Board endorsed by a 6-1 vote a request by Wendy's Old Fashioned Hamburgers for a special-use permit to build a drive-in window at its Scarlett Drive restaurant near U.S. 15-501.

Following Tuesday night's Planning Board vote, the request will go to the Chapel Hill Town Council for a public hearing Monday.

This is the second request submitted by Wendy's to obtain a drive-in window at the Scarlett Drive location. The first was denied in May 1979 because of town policy against any type of drive-in windows for restaurants.

Planning Board Chairman Roscoe Reeve, who cast the only dissenting vote, said that the Town Council had gradually persuaded the Planning Board to change its policy.

If the Wendy's request is approved, the existing policy against windows will not be much good because "there wouldn't be much teeth to it," he said.

Reeve's main concern with the approval is that a drive-in will discourage the pedestrian-oriented community the town is trying to develop.

The result, Reeve said would be strip development — several single businesses instead of a shopping center, the latter being preferable because it would facilitate more convenience for pedestrians and less conflict between people and cars.

"(With strip development), it's impossible to avoid conflicts between pedestrians and cars," Reeve said. "There are inherent safety problems in that situation."

Attorney Douglas Hargrave, agent for the holders of the Wendy's franchise, said there would be no concern about the impact of the window because the restaurant is not located in the crowded central business district.

Lewis files for town board

By KAREN HAYWOOD

Sonya Lewis, a member of the Carrboro planning board, announced Wednesday her intention to seek a seat on the Carrboro Board of Aldermen in the Nov. 3 election.

"I am very concerned about the Association for a Better Carrboro," said Lewis, a Carrboro Community Coalition member. "They are a threat to the bus system."

"Their talk about making the bus system pay for itself sounds great, but what students may not realize is they will (either) end up paying an exorbitant amount for a bus pass or for a taxi to get to campus."

The Association wants to cut services, but Carrboro does not have "enough services to be reduced," she said.

Lewis said she opposed tax increases, but that as a Coalition member she was fully committed to maintaining a strong public transportation system.

She said she was also concerned with maintaining Carrboro's parks and recreation program and bikeway system.

Instead of increasing taxes, Carrboro should increase its tax base through planned and coordinated development, Lewis said.

She also said her first emphasis would be representing student interests, that she had received enthusiastic support from student groups and that she would encourage students to vote.

Lewis is on the watershed task force and said she was also active in Carrboro parks and recreation programs.

Lewis graduated from UNC in 1981 with a bachelor's degree in biology.

In addition to student support, Lewis said she hoped to have an endorsement from the coalition.
