

Mayoral opponent says Drakeford lacks effect

By KAREN HAYWOOD

Bill Pressley, announcing his intention to run for mayor of Carrboro, said Mayor Bob Drakeford has not been influential enough with the town's Board of Aldermen.

Pressley said he hoped to influence the board to bring responsible financial management and fair government back to the town.

"Some of us have seen things that let us know that poor judgment, indecision and questionable financial responsibility are the rule rather than the exception," Pressley said.

Pressley, who is affiliated with neither the Carrboro Community Coalition nor the Association for a Better Carrboro, said he would like to do something about the "high tax increases this year on citizens and businessmen."

Another of his concerns is attracting more business and industry to Carrboro, he said, adding that the present board had not done enough to encourage businesses to locate in Carrboro.

"It's known that they had to turn away one business that would have employed 400 people," he said.

Pressley also expressed dissatisfaction with the town's recent suit against Wendy's restaurants.

"I think that when the zoning commission gets involved in zoning something for a particular thing, then the board and the (Carrboro Community) Coalition ought to stay out of it and also not sue them after they open up," he said.

Pressley said he was concerned with the visibility of the police station, which is behind the Carrboro Town Hall on West Main Street.

"Have you ever needed to find the police station or to ask directions at night or on the weekends?" he asked. "You would have to chase down a police car or go to Chapel Hill. You just cannot find the Carrboro police station."

Carrboro also needs a continuing bus system, Pressley said. He said he was in favor of bus shelters, so riders would not have to stand in the rain.

"If you're going to have a good bus system, you need a good place for people to wait on it," he said.

The theme of Pressley's campaign is "a clean sweep." His supporters carried brooms at a recent press conference.

Pressley is employed at University Lights, a light fixture retailer in Durham. He and his wife, Colleen, have lived in Carrboro since 1957.

Sadat

Rosser and other Western military witnesses said they saw at least seven men involved in the attack.

The discrepancy in the numbers between the official version and the witnesses' accounts raised the question of whether some of the attackers escaped. It also cast some doubt on the government's contention that the assassins were an isolated group.

Sadat had numerous enemies in Egypt and throughout the Arab world, both because of his peace treaty with Israel and his recent roundup of more than 1,500 foes charged with fomenting Moslem-Christian rioting. Palestinians in

Panel considers campus day-care

Members of a committee formed to study the feasibility of University-sponsored day-care met with parents at a public hearing Tuesday night to discuss problems facing faculty, staff and students with dependents.

Ann Fishel, chairman of the panel, said the increasing need for campus day-care was probably the most important issue on college campuses today. Fishel reported that this was true because of the tremendous influx to colleges of female students with infants.

A parent at the hearing, Julie Daniel-Bowen, said that, even if the University could not afford to pay for a day-care program, it would be helpful if it could provide space for a day-care facility on or Lebanon continued celebrating his death Wednesday by firing rifles, and several groups claimed responsibility within hours of the assassination, one of them purporting to be a military branch of a group headed by exiled Egyptian opposition leader Gen. Saadeddin Shazli.

Shazli was Egypt's chief of staff during the 1973 war. He was dismissed by Sadat for alleged incompetence, and later was appointed ambassador to Portugal and Britain. Shazli resigned his diplomatic post to protest the Camp David peace accords with Israel and became leader of the National Front, which vowed to overthrow Sadat and revoke the peace treaty.

Integration

In his speech at Granville Towers, Boulton said that black-white integration was following the same trend as dorm integration, adding that integration could not be implemented by University action. "One does not force that which comes from inside one."

Wende Watson, vice chairperson for the Black Student Movement, said she was unsure whether the desire for integration was as important as the desire for improved race relations.

"It may imply just a desire for better communication and relations between the races, given the fact that the campus is supposed to be integrated anyway," she said. Watson also said she agreed with dorm integration, as long as it did not extend to forced roommate situations.

day-care for their children, not the University's.

The second phase of the study will begin in about two weeks. A questionnaire will be sent to a random sampling of people with dependents and will ask for more specific information on how much families can afford to spend on a day-care program and what kind of day-care service families need.

The committee will present its findings to the Faculty Council in January.
