Scott Price, whose zone nickname is "Skipper Dan," said: "Some of the zones are so basic that someone usually figures them out before they end and many times they have been seen before. However, if somebody blurts out the ending they get yelled at and labeled an uncool mooter, which is the worst!"

"Any intelligent person has the right to ask, 'Are they serious?'"

Gene Krcelic, the UNC Mikeman and one of the group's founders, answered: "He KB (Kelvin Bryant) had? Does Darrell Nicholson beat on Charlie Wysocki year after year? Yes, we're serious, definitely serious!"

They are serious to the point of drawing up a set of rules and procedures. Bob Rogers, the "supreme founding father," said: "Every night we meet we call roll. On Monday nights we collect dues which are one quaker per person (quaker is zone talk for quarter)." In addition, there is a zoner absentee policy.

To be an official zoner, a member must: pay initial dues, watch the show five nights a week, report on any show not watched with the group, pay an extra quaker for failing to watch the show the required number of times and acquire a ZONE nickname.

Regardless of how silly it may sound, the idea of a "Twilight Zone" club appeals to quite a number of people.

"We have a constant membership of 14 hard-core zoners," Rogers said. "A lot of people drop by occasionally to watch it with us. We even have people coming from Hinton James."

Membership is open to anyone who watches the show or just wants to have a good time.

"Right now we are looking for any trivia whatsoever on Rod Serling," he said. "If anybody has any info call 933-3173 and ask for Rob or Gene."

"It's fun. We look at it as a 24-minute study break." "The Twilight Zone" is commercial-free on the Center for Public Television.

"Watching fun with the different people who drop by to check it out and relaxing without interfering with your study time," Rogers said.

The group is getting T-shirts, also. "They're going to be black fraternity shirts with white, Greek-style letters spelling ZONE," Rogers said.
