

Clemson game attracts eight bowl scouts

By NORMAN CANNADA
DTH Staff Writer

Saturday's North Carolina-Clemson game had all the outside ingredients needed for a game between two such highly ranked teams — fans, media and bowl scouts.

Fans came in a Kenan Stadium record crowd of 53,611. UNC officials said that the number of standing room only tickets alone exceeded any other game in the stadium's history.

The press also came in record numbers. So many members of the media wanted to see Saturday's game, eventually won by the second-rated Tigers 10-8, that many had to sit in the stands.

But the easiest way to tell how important this game was across the country was the number of bowl scouts in attendance.

Representatives from eight bowls — Sugar, Cotton, Orange, Gator, Liberty, Hall of Fame, Fiesta and Tangerine — saw Saturday's game. Each scout was watching both teams, looking at various aspects of the teams to fit into their respective bowl game.

"We're looking for good football teams with great traditions," Orange Bowl scout Steve Hudson said before Saturday's game. "It also is important for a team to be able to bring a lot of people down to Miami and these two teams (Clemson and UNC) can certainly do that."

Hudson said the Orange Bowl was looking at five teams — Alabama, Georgia, Pittsburgh, Penn State, and Florida State — as possibilities for the game in addition to Clemson and Carolina. The Tar Heels appear to be out of the Orange Bowl picture after losing to the Tigers, though.

The same appears to be true for the two other major bowls that are not locked up already, the Sugar and Cotton. Both bowls were looking at the nation's top eight teams Saturday, but will probably be narrowing down their list soon since bowl invitations will be extended Saturday. Clemson seems to still have a shot at each of the three bowls.

With most hope for a major bowl bid gone after Saturday's loss, bowl scouts from other bowls will probably be looking more at the Tar Heels.

"We're looking for teams that will finish in the 8-3 or 9-2 category," Hall of Fame Bowl scout Robert Fennell said before the game. "North Carolina is certainly one of the teams that may finish in that area. They are very high on our list."

Another bowl that said Saturday that UNC was among the higher teams on its list was the Liberty Bowl in Memphis. A scout for that bowl who watched Saturday's game said that the Tar Heels were among his bowl's "top three teams." The Liberty Bowl is looking for a host team from either the Southwest, Southeast or Atlantic Coast Conferences with the other team coming from the Big Eight or Big Ten conferences.

Gator Bowl and Fiesta Bowl representatives were also in attendance Saturday.

A Gator Bowl official said his bowl set for Jacksonville, Fla. in late December, is looking at the Tar Heels as well as nine other teams. The Gator Bowl is also looking into the possibility of a national championship showdown between No. 1 Pittsburgh and No. 2 Clemson should those teams remain undefeated. The Fiesta Bowl is looking into the same possibility.

North Carolina is among 15 teams being considered for the Tangerine Bowl in Orlando, Fla. A representative from that bowl at Kenan Stadium Saturday said the bowl is looking for a host team from either the Southeast Conference, the ACC or the state of Florida. He said he would like to see an opponent from either the Big Eight or Big Ten conferences.

Kansas b-ball tickets go out today

Basketball tickets for home games in Greensboro and Charlotte go on sale today at 8:30 a.m.

Students get a half price discount on game tickets for $4.50 and may buy a guest ticket for the full $9 price.

The first game is Nov. 28 against Kansas at 1 p.m. in the Charlotte Coliseum. On Dec. 17 the Tar Heels move to Greensboro to take on Southern California at 7:30 p.m.

UNC does not have another home-away game until Feb. 14 at 1 p.m. when it takes on Georgia and Dominique Wilkins on national television.

Tickets for the North-South Doubleheader in Charlotte will not be distributed today.

Quarterback Scott Stankavage had a tough time Saturday, first starting and then coming in for injured Rod Elkins. Stankavage went 8-for-21 and tossed a lateral pass late in the game to fullback Alan Burrus which did not connect. Clemson recovered to end all hopes in the 10-8 loss. Elkins is listed today as a probable starter for the Virginia game this Saturday. All other injured players, including tailback Kelvin Bryant, are expected to be back except safety Bill Jackson and center Steve McGrew.

Swim team gets a measure of progress

In anticipation of their season opener later this month, Carolina's swimmers and divers got a measure of their progress this weekend with a couple of tests last weekend.

In Friday night's Tar Heel 1650-50 meet, Carolina displayed its new-found clout on the women's team at the distances. Freshman Cay Andres captured the 1650 freestyle with a time of 17:04, an event that was one of the Tar Heels' weak areas last year.

Andres and Jeanette Nabell, another freshman, have bolstered UNC's strength at the distances. "Last year we were weak in that area," said sophomore breast-stroker and sprint free-styler Jenny Strickland. "But they seem to have filled that void that we had."

Sophomore Sue Walsh demonstrated that the sprints and the backstroke would again be the long-suit for the women as she won the 50-freestyle in a time of 24.16, just a second shy of the Atlantic Coast Conference record she set last season.

N.C. State swimmers took both the men's events, Carolina's Craig Bartlett taking second in the 1650 and UNC's Terry Jones second in the 50-freestyle.

"We've been training real hard," Strickland said of both teams' progress. "After these meets (Tar Heel Meet and Blue-White), it seems like we have a lot of potential. The times are going to drop even more."

"The Tar Heel meet was just a chance for the swimmers to get in some distance races. It gave them a chance to see where they were in training," Strickland said.

Saturday, the men and women divers traveled to the Penn State Invitational Diving Meet. Pacing UNC's performances was Janice Dalrymple who was sixth in the low board and 12th in the high board.

Diving coach Ben Aycock said that he was happy with his teams' diving. "Being that it's November, I'm very pleased with the way things are going. Our biggest problem is going to be our consistency."

"We had some really good dives and some really bad ones in the meet. We got what we wanted, though, which was a progress check," Aycock said.

Others placing were Sue Perfater (11th on the high board) John Domeron (11th, low board) and Barry Thomas (12th, low board).
