

10 groups decide Candidates split endorsements

By EDWINA RALSTON
University Editor

Since the Sports Club Council endorsed candidates for office Jan. 27, candidates for student body president and Daily Tar Heel editor have spoken before 10 groups trying to convince each that they were the best candidate to vote for in today's election.

Endorsements for student body president have been split between Mark H. Canady and Mike Vandenberg, with Summey Orr and Tim Smith receiving one each.

Canady has received endorsements from the Americans for Common Sense, the Association for Women Students, the Black Greek Council, the Black Student Movement and The Daily Tar Heel.

ACS and AWS seemed to agree that Canady would be the best choice for student body president because he was a more dynamic and active personality, according to statements from group leaders. The BGC chairman said the council endorsed Canady because of his access to the student body and the administration.

Canady won support of the BSM because the group felt he would be sensitive to the needs of students, the chairperson said, while the DTH endorsed him because he had "the ability and desire to recruit and motivate people," according to an editorial Monday.

Orr received the backing of the governing board of the Residence Hall Association because of his proposal to direct the Housing Committee of Student Government more toward off-campus students and because of his experience in student government, the RHA president said.

The Phoenix recommended Smith for student body president because "there flickers a hope that the stagnancy of student government will be swept away," according to a Monday editorial.

Vandenberg was endorsed by the Interfraternity Council, the Panhellenic Council and SCC.

IFC favored Vandenberg because of his proposals for campus food service while the Panhellenic Council endorsed him because of his knowledge of Student Government, according to statements from the groups.

SCC gave its support to Vandenberg because he seemed to have a median of the best qualities of the other candidates.

DTH editorial candidates John Drescher and Jonathan Rich split the endorsements for that office, winning support from five groups each.

Drescher was endorsed by BGC, IFC, the Panhellenic Council, The Phoenix and RHA.

BGC opted for Drescher because the group thought he had superior journalistic abilities, BGC chairman said. Drescher received the endorsements of the IFC and the Panhellenic Council because of his ideas for increased coverage of campus organizations, according to statements from these groups.

The Phoenix gave support to Drescher because he has the "poise and the confidence to make tough decisions under pressure," according to a Monday editorial. The RHA board felt his professional experience was a key factor and his ideas on investigative news were important, the board president said.

Rich was endorsed by ACS, AWS, BSM, the DTH and SCC.

ACS recommended Rich because the group decided that he would do more to open up the editorial page, while AWS chose Rich because it thought he was concerned with women's issues, according to statements by group spokespersons.

Rich received the BSM endorsement because the group determined that he had the best managerial talents, the chairperson said.

The DTH endorsed Rich because he had a "more thorough knowledge of the DTH and how it functions," according to Monday's editorial. The SCC opted for Rich because he committed himself to covering club sports, the president said.

Faith prompts Stookey's music

By MORRIS HAYWOOD
DTH Staff Writer

Noel Paul Stookey doesn't disappoint. Some could have said that his concert last Friday was a little short.

It lasted only two hours, with an intermission. Some could have said that there was too much talking. Stookey told a few of his humorous stories at first, but it didn't interrupt the flow of the concert. Some could have asked for more solos from Stookey's earlier career. He did two during the concert.

But in the end, Noel Paul Stookey doesn't disappoint. Stookey, who gained fame as Paul of the Peter, Paul and Mary trio of the 60's, performed Friday night at Memorial Hall to a near-full house.

Stookey is now playing with the Bodyworks Band, comprised of Kent Palmer on bass, Denny Bouchard on keyboards, Karla Sorro on vocals and keyboards and Jimmy Nalls on lead guitar.

The difference in Stookey's music today is not that he is doing folk music with the Bodyworks Band. It is instead his Christian faith that puts a meaning behind the music.

"The focal point is more specific," he said in an interview last week. "Peter, Paul and Mary sought to encourage good through music. My music with the Bodyworks Band is more specific in that not only do we encourage good, but also try to show you how you can find purpose in life through Jesus Christ."

That was readily apparent during the concert. He opened with some of his new numbers and talked some on North Carolina, love and the band. The music was mixed, including some of the old hits like "Hymn" and "Puff the Magic Dragon" and some real footstomping such as "Rejoice" and "Turn it Over".

Stookey didn't neglect his audience at all. He got them singing along on "Puff the Magic Dragon", "Building Block" and several others, most notably on "Do Lord."

The crowd was a mixed one, with believers and non-believers in attendance. And no one walked out after hearing him.

Contemporary Christian musicians often have the problem of dealing with an audience who may reject the performers when they realize that the concert is a type of ministry.

But Stookey doesn't preach. He is fond of stories and proves himself a master storyteller with his humorous jokes and tales.

"That's pure Stookey," said David Fouche, campus minister for the Baptist Student Union. "We prefer Stookey's approach, his sensitivity. I don't think there's any better way."

Fouche coordinated the concert with the help of several members of the Baptist Student Union.

After the concert, Stookey came across the same as he did on stage. He constantly joked, said "hi" to fans, and came back on stage to sign autographs.

So is Stookey a minister, an entertainer or what?

"He's all of that and more," Bouchard said.

And what does Stookey think of Stookey?

"I think I'm a communicator. I communicate God's word through music," he said. "I was really blessed to learn that making mistakes is a common denominator among all people. The Lord allowed me the strength to confess my sins."

'Short talk series' features planning views

By DAVID DEESE
DTH Staff Writer

Carrboro Town Manager Richard Hunter will lecture on views of community planning during a public session sponsored by the UNC Department of City and Regional Planning. The speech will be held Wednesday at 1 p.m. in 102 New East.

Hunter's speech is part of a "Short Talk Series" featuring new officials in the area and their views on planning. The series is an attempt by the Department of City and Regional Planning to acquaint students, faculty and town citizens with local public officials.

Dr. Shirley F. Weiss, coordinator of the series, said the sessions were designed to be short to fit into most daily routines. The speeches will last about 30 minutes, enabling students and faculty to reach 2 o'clock classes. Brown bag lunches are welcomed, Weiss said.

The "Short Talk Series" will be beneficial to both students and the public, she said.

"One of the University's responsibilities is to provide public services. This is an attempt by the Department of City and Regional Planning to do just that," Weiss said. "We were very pleased with the cooperation of the officials we contacted. They were eager to participate."

Hunter was not available for comment. David Taylor, Chapel Hill town manager, will be the feature speaker in the "Short Talk Series" Feb. 24.

The UNC Department of City and Regional Planning, among the first 10 educational planning programs in the United States, was originally based on ideas about regionalism, broad scale development planning and the application of social science methods to practical problems of government, Weiss said. Today, the department's scope includes urban, state and community planning; and physical, social, economic and natural environmental concerns. The implementation and management aspects of planning are also emphasized.
