

'Whorehouse' falls short

By MARC ROTH
Assistant Arts Editor

The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas, the third production in the Carolina Union's Broadway on Tour series, was disappointing in many respects. The musical score had only a few memorable songs (I heard a man humming the "Star Spangled Banner" after the performance, not a song from the production), the plot is almost nonexistent and the cast members performed as if they were greatly in need of a rest.

The music and lyrics, by Carol Hall, were not totally without merit. "Hard Candy Christmas," the song which echoes the feelings of the girls as they finally leave their former "place of employment," is at once touching and invigorating.

Two other numbers stood out, although perhaps more because of the interesting and accomplished vocal qualities of the performers rather than the songs themselves. "Doatsey Mae," as portrayed and sung by Jan Buttram, was a look into the life of the girl who "wanted to, but never could."

Susan Beaubien, as Jewel, was the epitome of big, bold and brassy in "Twenty-four Hours of Lovin'." Her presence and voice were enjoyable in spite of the weak song.

The only moment of real interest was the action conjured up by the performance of Patricia Rourke as Shy. Her transformation from the homely outcast to self-confident prostitute was just short of magical.

The rest of the cast was, for the most part, forgettable. Darleigh Miller as Miss Mona, the madam of the house, was not particularly grating, but she failed to create a character which went beyond her occupation.

Christopher Wynkoop as Sheriff Dodd offered a weak singing voice and an unsure characterization, while the characters of the mayor, the governor and the senator all faded into one unpleasant caricature.

The audience cannot help but feel cheated by Lawrence Miller's arrangement of black platforms and stairs rather uncreatively arranged to suggest a house of ill repute. What differentiates Miss Mona's establishment from perhaps other similar ones are her dormitory-like regulations and her insistence on being a mother rather than a madam. Thus this stark atmosphere is inappropriate for the warm atmosphere necessitated by the script.

Tommy Tune's musical staging is somewhat disappointing and deprives the audience of an all-out accomplished dancing feat. The direction by Tune and co-author Peter Masterson is satisfactory but far from inspired.

Meeting to promote nuclear freeze

By ANNA TATE
Staff Writer

A public meeting will be held at the Community Church in Chapel Hill in an effort to get the United States and the Soviet Union to freeze the testing and production of nuclear weapons, tonight at 8.

In an attempt to aid the growing segment of the religious community concerned with the build-up of nuclear weapons around the world, several religious groups in Chapel Hill have become active participants in a "freeze campaign."

One of these groups, the Fellowship to Reverse the Arms Race, is an interdenominational group sponsored by the Chapel Hill Ministerial Association.

"The group's focus is on arms control, but particularly on arms reduction," said Bob Phillips, coordinator of FRAR.

"President Reagan has scared a lot of people," he said. "I think his casual talk and foreign policy based heavily on verbal confrontation have many people concerned. The past year has heightened awareness that the people don't like what they hear."

Phillips said that FRAR and other Chapel Hill groups were organized in recognition of the fact that the United States was amassing nuclear arsenals and was thinking of acting offensively, not just defensively.

"We must address the issue and make sure that people become aware about the nuclear arsenals," he said. However, not all church leaders favor the disarmament movement.

"There are other things that demand priority," said the Rev. H. Lamarr Mooneyham of Durham, president of the N.C. Moral Majority.

"I would rather see the mainline denominations begin to be concerned with abortion on demand and other things set forth in the scriptures," Mooneyham said. "Nuclear proliferation is not found in the Bible."

Mooneyham said that as long as the Soviets build arsenals, he would encourage his people to do the same in the name of freedom.

New CGC holds orientation; date set for officer election

Newly-elected Campus Governing Council members attended an orientation session Monday afternoon to get acquainted and to familiarize themselves with the duties of the council.

Speaker ElChino Martin outlined the CGC's structure, explaining the duties of the Finance, Student Affairs and Rules and Judiciary committees. CGC members will elect members to these committees at their regular meeting Thursday.

The new CGC will also elect a speaker, speaker pro tem and committee chairpersons on Thursday, just three days after its first meeting.

"We're going to have to — without even having met each other — elect these officers," said CGC member Lori Dostal (District 5).

Martin outlined the budget process for the new CGC members, saying they should become familiar with the groups which presently receive council funding. The new CGC will begin reviewing organizations' requests for money in March.

"The biggest thing you have to do is a budget process and that's the first thing you have to do," Martin said.

Returning CGC member Phil Painter said the budget process may be difficult for the new members, but that the three returning members will be able to alleviate the difficulties.
