

President's defense plans impractical, Fallows says

By CHRISTINE MANUEL
Staff Writer

James Fallows, Washington editor of the Atlantic Monthly and author of National Defense, said Thursday in Hamilton Hall the United States will probably be unable to spend as much money on defense as the Reagan administration planned.

Fallows said before a crowd of almost 200 that the United States should realize its "constrained resources." "(The Reagan proposal) ignores the economic transformation of the United States in the past 30 years," he said, citing the nation's low production rate, unemployment, inflation and a change in the composition of the federal budget as major factors.

"In long range military planning," Fallows said, "the decision of today affects tomorrow." He called such planning a dangerous attempt and noted that when adjusted to inflation, defense spending had increased by only 1 percent in the last 30 years, including the Korean and Vietnam wars, the Cuban missile crisis and Soviet imperialism.

"We may have gone too far in building a military which is too technological," he said. "The machinery is very expensive, very complicated, very capable but more vulnerable."

As the unit price of military machinery has gone up, it has been matched by decreases in numbers. Fallows also added that much of the time, delicate, highly technological machinery cannot be relied on in combat and that it breaks down easily.

"The military too often has technical quality instead of tactical quality," Fallows said.

"The only way to motivate soldiers is not through fringe benefits," he said, "but through intangible human bonds, such as trust, among the soldiers and officers and among the military and the nation."

Fallows said he did not think the military represented a cross section of America, especially of whites, and that the United States should "think again about reinstating the draft" without deferments. He quoted a Marine colonel who called the military "an army of poor people defending a rich country."

Although Fallows said he had a student deferment, he criticized such postponements because of the need to distribute the burden of military service between the rich and poor.

Fallows, who was President Jimmy Carter's chief speech writer, left the Carter administration in 1978 but said he felt the condemnation of Carter's defense policy has been overdue. In the future, Carter's record will be better looked upon, he said.

The lecture was sponsored by the Curriculum in Peace, War and Defense.

College guide ranks UNC high

By ROBERT MONTGOMERY
Staff Writer

Everyone knows UNC is tops in college athletics, but a recently-published guide to colleges rates Carolina as one of the highest in the country in academics, social life and quality of life.

The 1982-83 New York Times Selective Guide to Colleges reviewed 265 colleges and universities across the country, including Davidson College, UNC-Greensboro, Duke and Wake Forest universities in this state. North Carolina State University was not reviewed.

The guide awarded one to five stars to each school reviewed in the categories of quality of life, social life and academics. UNC earned 13 stars in all—five in academics and four in both social life and overall quality of life. "It can be assumed that a college with a rating of four or five is something of a party school," states the book's introduction.

Only three other schools—the University of Virginia at Charlottesville and Brown and Stanford universities—scored higher than UNC with 14 stars. Ivy League schools Yale and Harvard only scored 12 stars each.

Carolina outscored rival schools Duke and Wake Forest. Duke earned 12 stars, while Wake Forest only scored nine. Davidson College scored 11 stars.

However, much criticism has been directed towards the book since its appearance last week, including information-gathering methods and numerous inaccuracies.

Three questionnaires were mailed to college administrators, and 25 questionnaires were distributed randomly to students at each school reviewed, according to a Newsweek interview with editor Edward B. Fiske.

Bill Peschel, a UNC senior who also works as a stringer for The New York Times, received a questionnaire for the UNC review. "They wanted me to write two pages' worth on the aspects of the campus."

Peschel said he recognized about one-third of the UNC profile as his work. The guide's profile commends UNC's English, history and political science departments, and calls the accounting, journalism, science and religion programs "strong."

The UNC section calls Darryl's restaurant on the Chapel Hill-Durham Boulevard a "particularly popular" eating spot for students, although many students have expressed differing opinions. The name of the restaurant is also misspelled in the book.

The guide also incorrectly reports that UNC and UNC-G offer the only doctoral programs in North Carolina. In fact, N.C. State also offers a doctoral program.

N.C. State officials expressed some dismay at being left out of the guide.

N.C. State spokesman Lucy Coulbourne said she found it hard to believe that a university with 21,000 students could be overlooked.

"We know of enough inaccuracies in the book that it does not matter that we were not included," said Barbara Baker, assistant director of N.C. State's information office. Students looking for colleges to attend do not use books as primary sources anyway, she added.

In the Newsweek interview, Fiske said that only a cross section of colleges was sought for the guide.

MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 1, 8:00 PM
at the Hill House, 210 W. Cameron for info. call 942-4057

HE: I've really enjoyed talking with you today. Why don't we swap Find Key Codes before the conference is over, so we can be sure we can get together again.

SHE: What's a Find Key Code?

HE: You know, a KEEP IN TOUCH Find Key Code. Mine is "ROGER PA83." Anyone that I give my Key Code to can always get my address and phone number. Even 10 or 20 years from now, and even if I've moved. All you have to do is write or call the Keep in Touch Service and give them the Code.

SHE: That's fantastic. Let's see, if I had a Find Key Code I could give it to Scott and Greg...and Don...and Chris...and Jacques...

HE: Never mind.

A new nationwide service: KEEP IN TOUCH Find Key Codes can help you keep lifetime contact with friends relatives, classmates, loved ones...anyone. Write or call (toll free) for our Free Brochure. Years from now, you'll be glad you did.
