

Change in law to cut towing in Chapel Hill

By ANNA TATE
Staff Writer

In an effort to discourage illegal parking, the Chapel Hill Town Council has put some new amendments on its books that restrict towing but may increase fines and ticketing.

The council voted last Monday night to restrict towing except in emergencies after hearing from deputy town attorney Granger Barrett.

Barrett said that according to a ruling by the Fourth District Court of Appeals, a person's car cannot be towed away without due process.

The problem was brought to the town's attention by attorneys for student government, he said.

The amendments to the town's towing ordinance should take effect April 5, Barrett said, and will require that the owner of an illegally parked car be notified and given the opportunity for a hearing before the car is towed.

Barrett said that the opportunity for a hearing will probably mean that the car will not be towed, unless it is blocking traffic or creating a safety hazard.

A familiar scene: cars being towed from a local lot ... in the future, owners may only face higher fees

If an emergency situation occurs and a car is towed, the car owner must be notified as soon as possible after the towing and must be given the opportunity for a hearing.

"To get the car back before the hearing, the owner would have to post bond," Barrett said.

A police officer not connected with the towing will be responsible for conducting the hearing, he said. The owner must pay the cost of the towing if probable cause is found. Otherwise, the town must foot the bill.

Barrett gave examples such as the 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. restricted parking zones and the loading and unloading zones where towing will be reduced.

The revised ordinance may cost more to enforce, he said, and people may tend to disregard parking restrictions without the threat of towing.

Barrett suggested, however, that raising ticket prices may help. Current parking fines are $1 for meter violations and $10 for other violations.

Mayor Joe Nassif asked why proposals for higher parking fines were not already before the council. "Pretty soon we'll be consuming ourselves in not only time but money," he said.

Exchange scheduled

There will be a general information meeting for all interested students at 4 p.m. Wednesday, March 24 in 204 Union. Applications are due in the basement of Steele Building by Wednesday, March 31.

The luck of the Irish?

When Thomas S. Monaghan opened his first few stores in 1960, it took more than luck to build up a pizza company that is now the fourth largest in the world, and the first in fast, free delivery.

It took these pizza principles: to make only pizza, to use top quality ingredients, and to deliver your pizza to your door in 30 minutes at no additional charge.

Now, aren't you the lucky one!

Community Food Bank helps the needy through distribution of donated surplus

By MELISSA MOORE
Staff Writer

A private, non-profit agency in Cary is helping fill gaps in services to the needy created by federal cutbacks in funding.

The Community Food Bank of North Carolina is making food surpluses available by allowing manufacturers to donate unsold food. The group sponsored a forum Feb. 18 in Raleigh where it presented a plan to make food banking available statewide. Church groups and social service organizations funded privately or by the government attended the forum.

"Thirty-one million pounds of fresh produce were left in the fields last year," said Barbara Oates, the agency's executive director. Machine failure and market slumps were among causes of the surplus. The food bank is recruiting volunteers to pick the food, she said.

Another plan not in operation in North Carolina is an emergency food box, which is a community effort to prepare meals for transients, the unemployed and others who have been screened by agencies that do not have food to give them, Oates said. A food box would get part of its food from the food bank and would purchase the rest.

Enough money is a major problem. Money comes from primate contributions and religious groups. Other gifts include food from private industry, equipment from businesses and donations from truckers. Because of regulations on truckers by the Interstate Commerce Commission, sometimes a trucker takes a load one direction and must come back empty, Oates said. When this "deadheading syndrome" occurs, the trucker does not get money for the trip and often donates the food to a food bank.

Oates said there are no food donors in Orange or Chatham counties. But students could help in several ways. The food bank needs volunteers for harvesting surplus food or working in the warehouse.

A student also could serve as a public relations person in Chapel Hill, educating civic organizations about the food bank. This student could get groups to help harvest or could start a fund-raising project.

Vera Carter of Austin Foods, a bakery that specializes in vending machine products, said, "I think it's going to help out a whole lot, especially when they (the food bank) get more donors." Austin Foods in Cary was one of the first to donate, giving overruns or merchandise that couldn't be sold. "Once they get people educated it will be a good thing," Carter said. The Cary food bank has distributed 113,000 pounds of food since it began in December, 1980.

The UNC Media Board announced Monday that two at-large positions, one one-year position and one two-year position, are open to applicants.

All applicants must submit letters of application and resumes by Thursday, April 8, said Media Board Chairman Dodd Haynes. No letters of recommendation are required, he said.

Interviews for the positions will be held at 7 p.m. on Tuesday, April 13.

At-large members cannot have any connection with any of the member publications of the Media Board, which are The Alchemist, The Cellar Door, The Carolina Quarterly, The Yackety Yack and The Phoenix.

The at-large members of the Media Board are expected to contribute impartial opinions at the board meetings and to represent the student body as a whole.

Applications should be turned in to the Media Board, Box 13-065A of the Carolina Union.
