

Heels make it a March Mardi Gras

While Franklin Street was being torn down, New Orleans' Bourbon Street was even impressive to the locals. "It's far from like this most of the time," said one woman hot dog vendor, who charged $2.25 a dog, on the corner of Bourbon and St. Peters streets. "Of course it's not as big as the Mardi Gras, but the people have really been out here the last few nights."

One of those out after the Tar Heels won the national championship was Gov. Jim Hunt complete with Carolina Blue pom-poms. "He asked for two so I gave them to him," said one cheerleader.

Of course many wanted to know what a Hoya was. The way it is explained to me, it is part of a Latin word that means a brick or stone wall. OK.

Sunday night a former sports editor of a large Southern University's newspaper who had heard enough chants of 'Dean Smith chokes' lost his professional objectivity long enough to request a song at O'Briens'.

From North Carolina to Georgetown, "All they are is just another brick in the wall."

The Hoyas came back with "Nothing could be finer than to beat North Carolina in New Orleans."

They were just another brick in the wall.

UNC fans hit Bourbon Street as soon as the hard-fought NCAA championship was over. They could be heard even better than the New Orleans jazz in the background.

Slogan T-shirts were everywhere after the game from 'North Carolina - National Champions' to 'New Orleans - city of sin, where women are women and so are the men.'

The players, who stayed with their parents in a ritzy hotel in the heart of the French Quarter, were allowed on the streets Monday night. They couldn't and shouldn't have been stopped after that exciting win.

Carolina Blue owned the French Quarter until early morning when the regular drunks took over again.

Tar Heel fans were talking and shouting to others of the school's persuasion — no matter who it was or if they knew them.

The everyday student could talk with the big wigs like assistant coach Bill Guthridge and Athletic Director John Swofford and feel comfortable.

One happy family on Bourbon Street.

"Are there any Hoyas here?" one asked.

Response — There are some in the third house on the right with the red light in the window.

Clifton Barnes

One prominent alumnus was playing the ukulele in the middle of the street. Accompanying him on vocals was any Tar Heel fan who knew the words to "Rah, Rah Carolina." And even some fans, who for some strange reason, had suddenly forgotten the words.

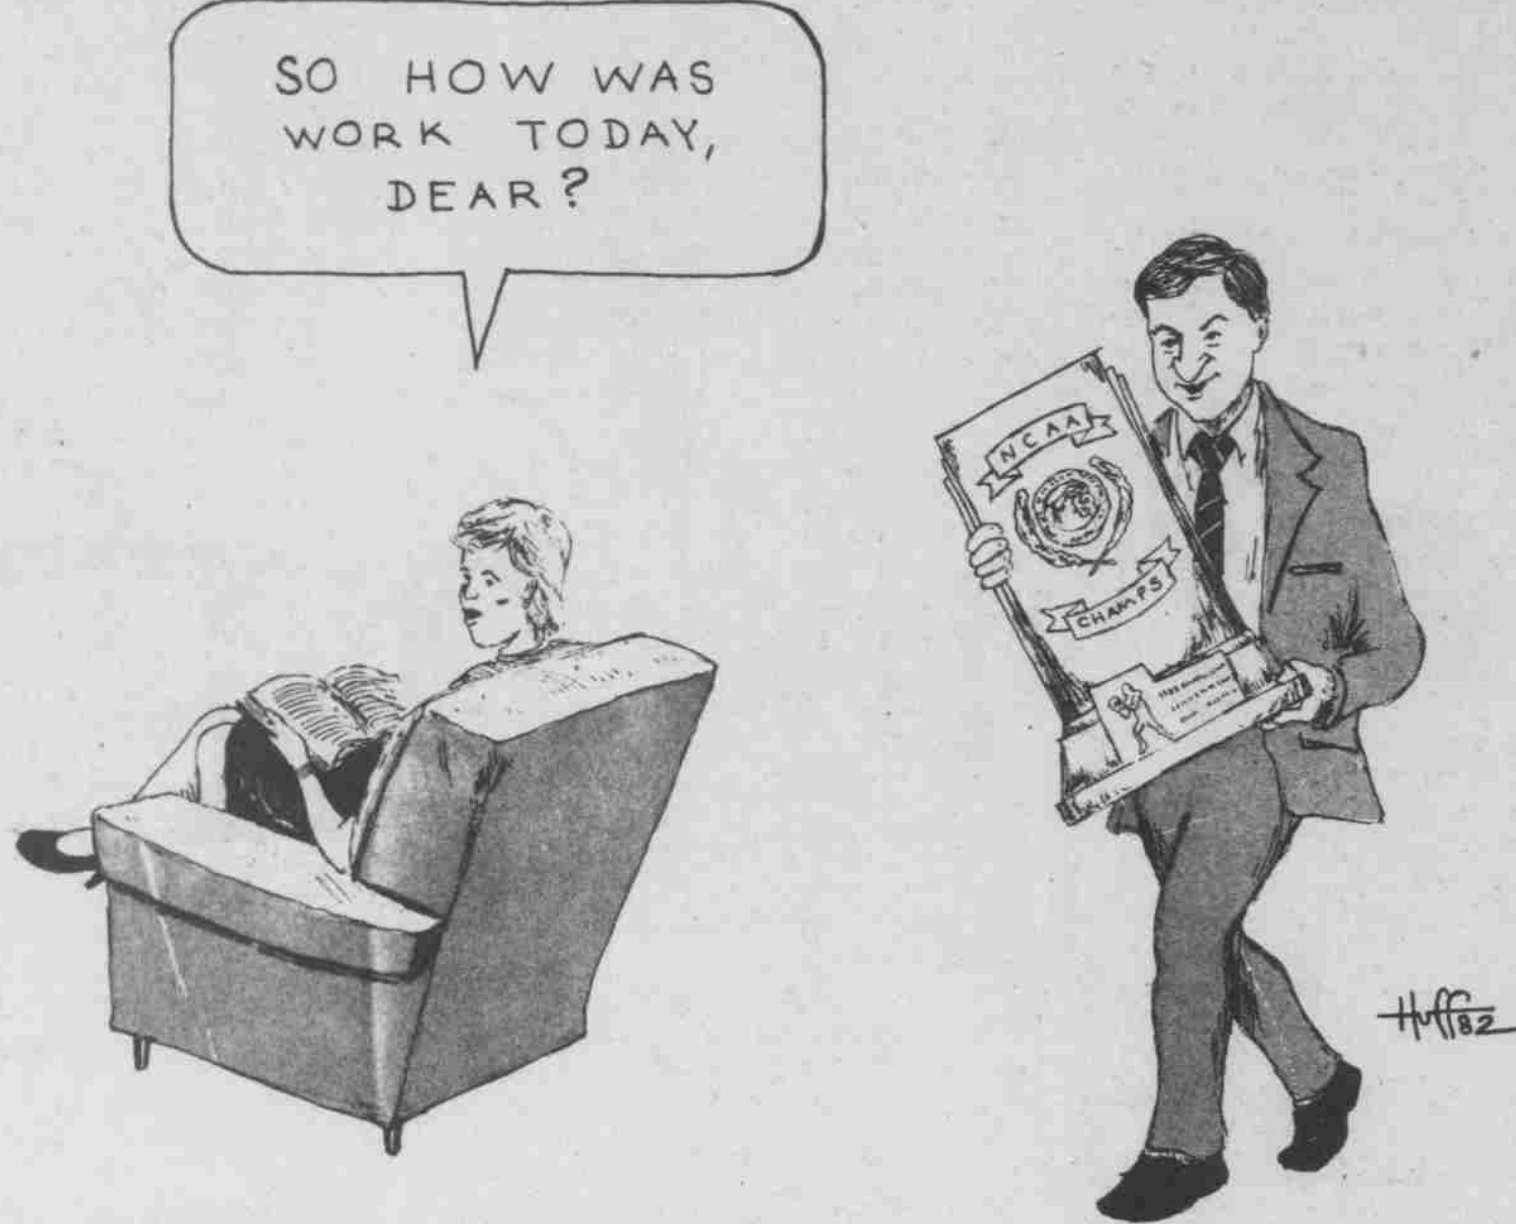

Yes ladies and gentlemen, alcohol was prevalent. No surprise, huh.

If somebody tells you they went to the Final Four, don't believe them unless they can show you a Hurricane glass from one of the popular drinking spots — preferably Pat O'Briens' or Crazy Shirley's.

Pat O'Briens' had been packed with Hoyas from Georgetown Friday, Saturday and Sunday nights. They weren't there Monday night or Tuesday morning.

Sunday night Hoya fans yelled "What the Hell's a Tar Heel?"

They found out.

Women netters defeat Duke; doubles matches lift men to win

from staff reports

The North Carolina women's tennis team raised its record to 9-5 Tuesday when they defeated Duke by a 7-2 margin at the University courts.

Carolina won all but one of the singles matches. The only loss came when No. 5 Julie Kirby lost to Duke's Debbie Treash 6-3, 6-4.

In other singles action, No. 1 Kathy Barton defeated Sharon Selmon 6-2, 7-6. No. 2 Betsy Heidenberger stopped Linda Patlovich 6-3, 7-5; No. 3 Margie Brown topped Tia Cottey 6-3, 6-4; No. 4 Katharine Hogan took Margaret Mayer 6-0, 6-1 and No. 6 Pam McNierney defeated Julie Levering 6-3, 6-4.

In doubles action, the Lady Tar Heels won two of the three matches. Trouble came in the No. 2 doubles as Hogan and Barton were defeated by Patlovich and Selmon. In the No. 1 doubles, Brown and Heidenberger downed Cottey and Treash, 6-3, 6-1 and in the No. 3 match, Kirby and McNierney topped Levering and Mayer 6-4, 6-2.

Coach Kitty Harrison said the Duke team was the toughest competition that Carolina had in the state and that she was pleased with the team's performance.

"This is really the first match we've had all year where we had a solid front—it might be because of the basketball game last night."

Carolina's next home match will be today at 2 p.m. against Harvard.

They will travel to Austin, Texas April 2-4 for the Lady Longhorn Invitational.

UNC's men tennis matches were much closer yesterday.

After a split of the singles matches, the men's team won two of three doubles matches to slip past Furman, 5-4, in a match played in Greenville, S.C.

Carolina's Ray Disco won at the No. 1 seed, defeating Don Barton, 7-5, 6-3. At No. 3, Ken Ludwig beat Kenny Hirsch, 6-3, 6-2. Josh Sarner won at No. 5 over Frank Taylor, 6-4, 6-2.

In the Furman wins, Scott Deutsch beat Ron Erskine at No. 2, Ray Frazier defeated Ken Whitaker in three sets at No. 4, and No. 6 Fred McKay beat John Grigg in three sets.

In doubles action, Carolina's 2nd-seeded team of Erskine and Grigg defeated Deutsch and Mike Iverson, 6-3, 6-3. The No. 3 team of Whitaker and Robbie Bach beat Taylor and McKay, 6-3, 6-1. Furman's No. 1 team, Barton and Frazier, won over Disco and Ludwig, 6-1, 6-2.

The Tar Heel netters are now 9-7 overall going into today's match against South Carolina in Columbia, S.C. They return home Friday to face ACC foe Clemson at 2 p.m. on the Hinton James courts.

The Heels will then go on the road for three matches to play Maryland Sunday April 4, William & Mary April 5 and Virginia April 6.

Kumiega's two HRs leave Camels dry

By S.L. Price
Assistant Sports Editor

Two home runs by first-baseman Pete Kumiega and a four-hit performance by pitcher Steve McGuire launched the Carolina baseball team over Campbell College 6-2 yesterday at Buies Creek.

Kumiega's solo blast in the top of the seventh broke a 2-2 deadlock and put the Tar Heels ahead to stay, raising their season record to 15-17.

The Camels grabbed two quick runs in the first, but Kumiega responded quickly with his first homer to make it 2-1.

Right-fielder Barney Spooner rocketed a two-bagger and Todd Wilkinson singled him in to make it all even at 2-2.

But Kumiega, who went two-for-three and is second on the team with a .319 batting average, put any Campbell hopes for a win to rest with his second home run of the day.

The Tar Heels scored twice more in the seventh to seal the win.

Tim McGee, who has had troubles at the plate lately, came to life with a two-for-four showing for the day, while Spooner, riding a hot streak, went two-for-five.

It was McGuire's first complete game in only two starts; coach Mike Roberts has used McGuire mostly for long relief. Today's win raised his record to 3-3.

Campbell had beaten N.C. State the day before meeting North Carolina, but State had beaten the Tar Heels earlier this year at Boshamer Stadium.

The team will travel to Winston-Salem today to meet Wake Forest in their sixth Atlantic Coast Conference game of the season; the Tar Heels are currently 3-2 in the ACC. Freshman Brad Powell will start against the Deacons.

Carolina will be home for one game April 1 against UNC-Wilmington, before taking off again for four games on the road.

The team has been hitting well of late; short stop Chris Pittaro is now batting .311, with 2 home runs and 18 RBIs. Left fielder Jim Thrift is swatting a clean .342 with two home runs and 11 RBIs, after coming off a lower back injury he received over spring break. Third baseman Jeff Hubbard is now batting .283, with 1 home run and 16 RBIs. Kumiega now has seven home runs.
