

Fall preregistration begins for General College students

By CHARLIE ELLMAKER
Staff Writer

General College students can begin preregistration procedures on Monday, April 5, continuing through Thursday, April 22. Adviser appointment books will be placed on the table on the second floor of Steele Building on Wednesday, March 31. Each General College student must meet with his own adviser, receive an approval form, and take that form to the university cashier's office in Bynum Hall.

Students in the College of Arts and Sciences preregister from April 7 through April 14. Each student should meet with his department adviser, secure an approval form and take it to O1 Hanes for processing. Students in prelaw, pre-dental and pre-medical programs, international studies, interdisciplinary studies, industrial relations and special categories should meet with their advisers in the departmental deans' offices.

Business administration students will preregister from April 7 through April 14.

Students should go by Carroll 109 beginning Monday, March 29 for preregistration materials and advising.

Education students should check in Peabody Hall for advising sessions, which will be held from 4 p.m. until 6 p.m. April 1.

Evening college preregistration will be by appointment from Tuesday, April 13 through Friday, April 23. Appointments should be made the week before the 13th by calling 962-1134.

Journalism students will preregister from April 7 to April 14 in 100 Howell. Registration procedures for dental hygiene, pharmacy, public health, law, library sciences, social work, medicine and dentistry will be announced in class, through the dean or through the registrar.

Graduate students registered for the spring semester must preregister for the fall semester from April 7 to April 14 if they plan to be enrolled at that time.

No student may register for summer sessions or the spring semester unless his University account has been cleared.

New fall course geared to boost liberal arts major

By DEAN FOUST
Staff Writer

In response to the increasing student matriculation to business-related studies, the University Counseling Center and University Placement Services are co-sponsoring a one credit-hour course next fall designed to promote the values of a liberal arts education.

The course, "Career Planning for the Liberal Arts Student" (Special Studies 90, Section 3), will be offered to first-semester sophomores in an effort to promote the practical experience gained through a liberal arts education, said Sherry Stuckey, assistant director for outreach in the UCC and coordinator for the project.

"There's been a concern that many students in the past few years have been moving toward the practical-oriented courses and majors like business and industrial relations," she said. "I think this has concerned the College of Arts and Sciences."

"There seems to be, in this day of economic distress, a move by students to become a business or economics major," said Dennis Whittle, Chairman of the Academic Procedures Committee in Student Government. "They feel this assures them they will get a job. People, it seems to us, are using college as a vocational school, as opposed to making it an intellectual experience. This is something the course hopes to dispel."

"Liberal arts provides you with training in conceptual organization, writing skills and understanding the concepts of the human mind, something business and economics cannot and does not attempt to cover," Whittle said.

"The emphasis of the course is not that the business, economics and industrial relations departments are overloaded and are looking for a safety valve," he said. "The emphasis is to show what liberal arts can do for students."

The Academic Advising Committee will aid in the course by providing a student intern who will assist in the course by possibly participating on panels and critiquing the course at the semester end, he said. The purpose of having Student Government involvement was to shift some of the course responsibilities to students, as with the black-white relations course started last year, he said.

The class will be taught by Jay Pence, an associate professor in the speech department, with assistance from the UCC and UFS staffs. The course will include discussions and panels with guest speakers. Students will also be required to conduct an informational interview and do a research project.

The course will meet Thursdays from 12:30 to 1:45 p.m. in Murphy 105 and registration will be limited to 30 students. A $10 fee will be charged to cover the cost of the reading materials.

1982-83 orientation planning process begins

By MARY EVANS
Staff Writer

Although the 1982-83 academic year still is several months away, hundreds of UNC students are already involved with plans and preparations for Orientation '82.

The orientation program involves student volunteers who serve as Area Coordinators, Orientation and Pre-Orientation Counselors and Operations Staff members. These students organize programs and events designed to introduce freshmen and junior transfers to life at the University, said Laura Beaver, co-Area Coordinator for Spencer, Triad and Old Well.

Orientation will take place Aug. 15-22, and will give new students a chance to adapt and adjust to any problems they may encounter before classes begin the next week, Beaver said.

There will be some changes in the Orientation program next fall because of the new housing policy that gives freshmen the option of living off-campus, said Brent Lister, Orientation Commission chairperson.

"Off-campus freshmen will be given the same status as freshmen who live at home in Chapel Hill," Lister said. "They will be told the times and places of the programs, but they will not be assigned to a specific counselor. They'll lose some of the personal touch of Orientation by being off-campus," he said.

The Orientation Commission recently selected the Area Coordinators and is in the process of selecting Orientation and Pre-Orientation Counselors now, Lister said.

"An A.C.'s job includes planning orientation events and coordinating the activities of the Orientation Counselors," Beaver said. "We and our O.C.s must be creative and enthusiastic ourselves and also extend our enthusiasm to the freshmen," she said.

The Orientation program for junior transfers generally receives less attention than the freshman orientation program, Lister said.

"People don't see Orientation as doing that much for the junior transfers," he said. "Only 900 junior transfers are involved with Orientation in the fall, while all entering freshmen are involved in the Orientation program."

The O.C.s need to be truly concerned with Orientation and willing to make a concentrated effort to help the program work, Lister said.

"The basic duty of an Orientation Counselor is to get each freshman off to as good a start as possible," he said. "Each freshman will have varying needs and concerns, both academic and social, and a good O.C. should be able to identify and help solve their problems."

The Pre-Orientation program is a support program for minority students and counselors in this program have slightly different goals. "Pre-Orientation Counselors should help minority students get a feel for what they should expect from the Orientation program and the University in general," Lister said. "We want the students to feel that they have someone to turn to, that they aren't alone at the University."

Students involved with the Operations Staff are primarily responsible for directing traffic when students move in, but will also help set up equipment for programs like Tar Heel Days and Freshman Convocation.

Orientation is financed with student fees. Each entering freshman pays a $15 Orientation fee, while each junior transfer pays a $7.50 fee. Most of the fees go toward advertising costs and the printing of various handbooks, schedules and mailings, Lister said.

Award to be given

Nominations forms for the Harry Anthony "Tony" Bernard Memorial Award are now available in the Residence Hall Association Office or through any area governor.

The award will be presented this year to the Assistant Area Director or Assistant Tower Manager (in Granville) who has contributed to the lives of residents and staff through service and counseling.

Applications must be returned to the RHA Office by Friday, April 16.
