

Polled citizens endorse change in drinking age

By SUE POWELL
Staff Writer

Young people are not completely opposed to raising the drinking age according to the UNC School of Journalism's latest Carolina poll.

According to the poll, 47 percent of people between 18 and 29 favored Gov. Jim Hunt's Crime Commission's proposal to raise the legal age of purchasing beer and wine from 18 to 21.

In the 30 to 77 age bracket, 68 percent supported the proposal. The overall percentage of people wanting the drinking age raised was somewhat lower, 63 percent, while 33 percent were in opposition, and 4 percent did not know.

Why is there such a difference between the age groups? Philip Meyer, one of the journalism professors who directed the survey, said older people have much less to lose than their younger counterparts. Only the younger individuals will be directly affected if the bill becomes a law.

Another question asked in the poll was, "Which of the following age groups do you think has the most serious problem with drunken driving — under 18, 18 to 21, or over 21?" Fifty-eight percent of the people polled thought it was 21 and under. Thirty-seven percent said 21 and over.

John H. Lacey of the Highway Safety Institute agrees with the results. He has found that younger age groups, such as 18 to 20, have a higher than average percentage of alcohol-related traffic accidents. This is also true with the 20 to 25 age bracket.

In addition, people between the ages of 16 and 30 accounted for 50 percent of the people arrested for drunken driving in the Triangle Area in one year, Meyer said. He offered this information from a soon-to-be released study on drunken driving in the Triangle Area.

The younger group also had the highest percentage to say they had driven after having more than two drinks in the previous hour. Forty-two percent of the 18 to 29 age group admitted to this, compared to only 12 percent of the 30 and up division.

In response to these results, Lacey said, "Young people may be more willing to confess." Young people also have to drive home more often than older ones after drinking, he said.

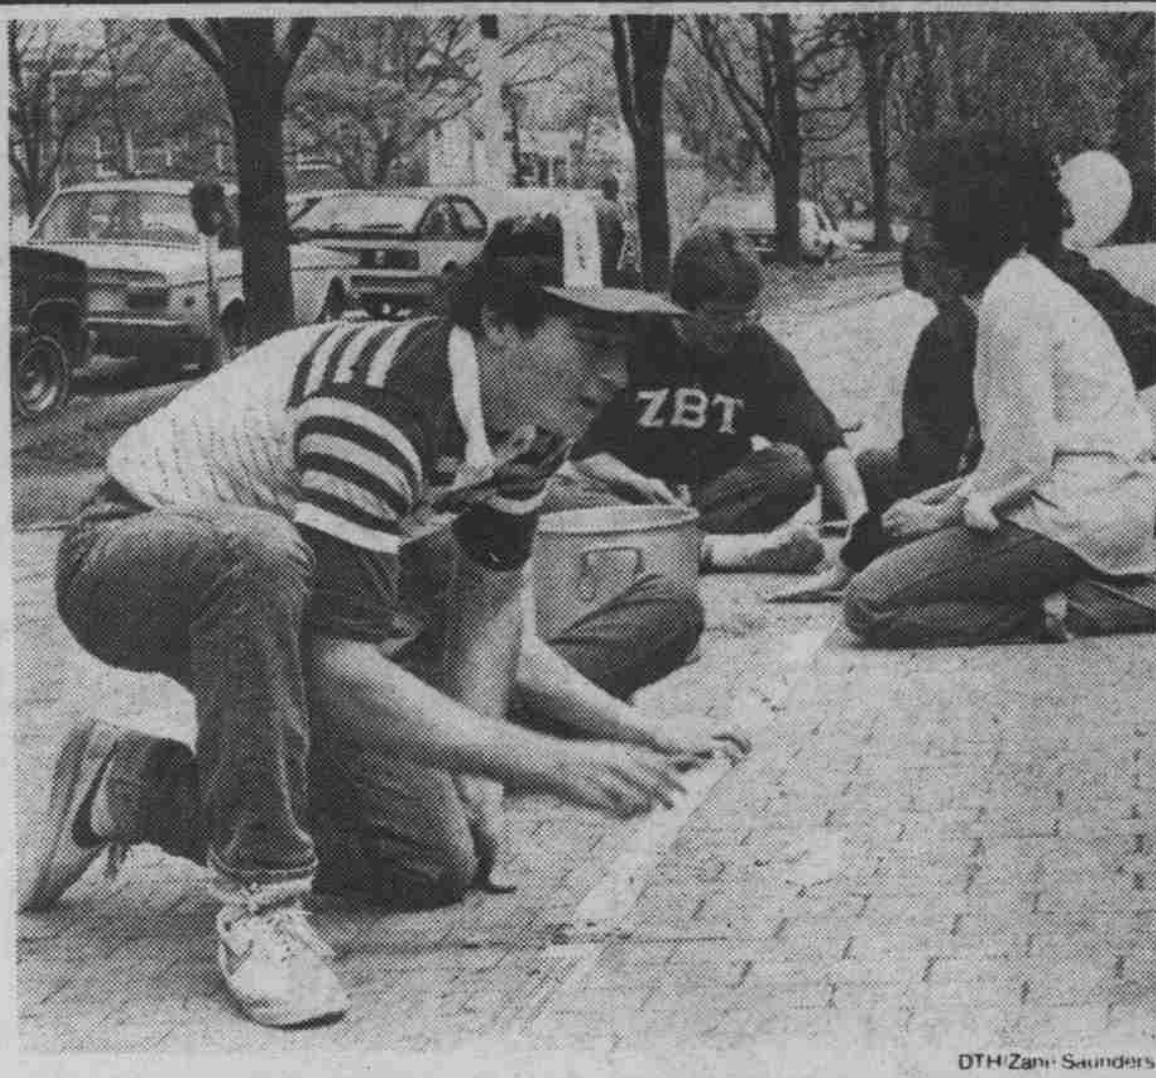

Of the 18 percent that admitted to drinking and driving, only 40 percent supported raising the drinking age, Meyer said.

The poll was derived from 593 telephone interviews conducted between Feb. 24 and March 4. The numbers were chosen from a random list selected by computer.

The poll was conducted in connection with two journalism classes, Research Methods and Advanced Reporting, under the supervision of Meyer and Jane Brown. Two major Carolina Polls are taken every year.

Police building

Occupants will be responsible for upkeep and repairs

By MARY WILLOUGHBY
Staff Writer

The Chapel Hill Town Council will advertise this week for bids from parties interested in leasing on a short-term basis the former town police building, said Assistant Town Manager Sonna Lowenthal.

While the building, located at the corner of Rosemary and Columbia streets, is not within the historical district of the town, there has been some concern over possible interior or exterior structural changes. According to Lowenthal, the terms of the lease would restrict the tenants from making unauthorized interior renovations or changing the building's facades.

"Any kind of changes (interior or exterior) will have to be approved beforehand by the town manager (David R. Taylor)," she said.

Additionally, under the terms of the lease, tenants would be responsible for routine maintenance and repairs, as well as security measures, she said.

Production of income is the primary concern of the town in its attempt to lease the building, Lowenthal said. The basic idea behind the short-term lease is to produce income for Chapel Hill while preventing the decay and deterioration of the building.

The town desperately needs additional public library office and meeting space, she said. As a result, the town will evaluate such needs before granting a lease for the building.

"Since we have this resource (the former police building) we need to keep this in mind," Lowenthal said.

In order to evaluate the town's space needs, a comprehensive study will be implemented, but will not be completed this fiscal year. A short-term lease would not interfere with any long-range plans which may result from the study, she said.

The former police building would ideally be leased for three-to-five years, beginning July 1982.

"The committee has been undergoing organization for the first few weeks," said John Robinson, who represents the BSM on the committee. "But we have talked about ways of handling campus issues of a nature like the racial incidents that occurred last semester. If that were to happen again, the committee would work to move the issue to the top of the Honor Court docket."

"The committee is a good idea," Robinson said. "We want to actually do something to improve race relations, not just talk about it."

"It's (the booklet) definitely helpful for making improvements. We make an effort to get feedback from our residents."

A spokesperson for Carolina Apartments, who would say only that she was not the manager there, said it would be in her best interest not to comment on the booklet at all. She added that the manager could not be reached for comment.
