

Students arrested during protest

By LUCY HOLMAN
Staff Writer

Three UNC students were arrested in Fort Bragg recently while protesting against the Reagan administration's El Salvador policies.

Alex Charns, a UNC law student, and UNC undergraduates Mark Beatty and Steve Kahn were arrested March 27 with Patrick O'Neil, an East Carolina University student, on charges of trespassing on federal military facilities.

The four formed a blockade across a street in Fort Bragg carrying a banner which read "Stop U.S. Trained Salvadoran Death Squads." Ten minutes after the protest began, the marshals' deputies arrested the group.

The students were taken before U.S. Magistrate Stuart Clarke and let out on their own recognizance, without having to post bail.

William I. Berryhill Jr., U.S. Marshall for the East District of North Carolina, said the group was arrested for trespassing because they were not demonstrating in the area designated for legal protest.

Polly Passonneau, a UNC law student present at Fort Bragg, said the demonstration was designed to make people look at the problem in El Salvador and to protest the training of more than 900 Salvadoran troops in Fort Bragg. "What's going on (the training) is going on in Fort Bragg. There's a need to direct attention there," she said.

The Fort Bragg protest was held in conjunction with the national March on Washington, held the same day, in protest of U.S. policies in El Salvador.

More than 100 UNC students, faculty members and Chapel Hill residents drove to Washington in two chartered buses and several cars to join the crowd of at least 23,000 gathered at the rally.

"The purpose of the march on Washington was to send a message to the administration that a large number of Americans are opposed to U.S. involvement in El Salvador," said Doug Berger, a UNC undergraduate who attended the demonstration.

The groups assembled in the nation's capital marched from noon to about 4 p.m. along a three-mile course through Lafayette Park, according to Washington police.

Charns said he protested in Fort Bragg instead of marching in Washington because he wanted to protest in a more forceful way. "I've tried all the level protests—that doesn't work," he said. "Reagan won't listen any other way. My action forces (the administration) to confront the issue; it lets them know in Washington that I'm willing to go to jail."

Charns said he was protesting the fact that Reagan, to get more aid for El Salvador, is saying the human rights situation is improving and U.S. policies are helping the Salvadorans when in reality they are not.

"People were fooled about Vietnam," Charns said. "I see a pattern appearing in El Salvador policies. I don't want to see it happen again. It's become a cliché to say 'No More Vietnams,' but to a certain extent it's true."

According to a spokesman for U.S. Magistrate Stuart Clarke, the four men face the possibility of a $500 fine, six months in prison or both as penalties for federal trespassing.

Research group cites UNC dropout rate

By ROBERT MONTGOMERY
Staff Writer

More than 20 percent of all freshmen entering UNC do not graduate, and dropout percentages for blacks and women are higher than whites and males, according to a study by UNC Institutional Research.

About 11 percent of UNC freshmen do not return for their sophomore year. Of those freshmen, 18 percent do not reach their junior year and 21 percent do not continue to the senior year, said Timothy Sanford, associate director of Institutional Research.

A higher percentage of whites remain in school at UNC, but blacks have a higher dropout rate than other minorities. The percentage of white freshmen who do not become sophomores is 10 percent, while 17 percent of the black freshmen do not return. All other races have a dropout rate of 18 percent.

Hayden B. Renwick, associate dean of the college of arts and sciences, said that he thought the dropout percentage for blacks was higher than the actual figure, but said he knew of no other studies on retention.

In an average freshman class, 17 percent of the white freshmen do not return for their junior year, and 26 percent of the black freshmen do not return. For all other races, 29 percent do not return.

Not returning for the senior year are 20 percent of the white freshmen while 30 percent of the black freshmen never become seniors at UNC. About 28 percent of the freshman of other races do not become seniors.

There are actually more students from other races who return for their senior year because of re-enrollment, Sanford said. "This accounts for the rise in the percentages from the junior to senior year."

"Many students do not return after their freshman year because of what could be called culture shock," Sanford said. He said the study, which has been conducted since 1974, had produced a variety of reasons for students leaving school.

"For many students, UNC is just too big," he said. He also said many students leave because of personal or health problems. "Some students also decide on a major which is not here."

Edith Elliott, assistant vice chancellor for student affairs, said that "the size of the University is probably a problem for some people." But many students return after leaving for a while, she said.

Harold Wallace, vice chancellor for University affairs, said he was pleased with the progress of black students in recent years. "We have been improving the rates of retention for everyone and black students have increasingly finished school here."

Wallace also said that UNC did well considering its size and level of academics compared to other colleges. "There are a number of reasons for students to leave, but the rate of retention has been improving."

The retention study also showed that more women than men drop out of school at UNC. "One of the reasons women sometimes give for leaving is the fact they are getting married, but men never give this reason," Sanford said.

The retention study has shown steady results, Sanford said. "Each freshman class has had about the same percentages."

Councilman seeks library, recreation funds

By ANNA TATE

Citing numerous statistics on funding for public libraries, parks and recreation departments throughout the state, Chapel Hill Town Council Member Winston Broadfoot asked the council to seek more money from Orange County for the two town departments this year.

Broadfoot said the county's contributions to the operating costs of the Chapel Hill Public Library and the recreation department at least should be doubled.

Town Manager David Taylor, who originally recommended that Chapel Hill seek $99,450 for the library and $77,440 for parks and recreation, said an increase could be justified.

Broadfoot said Chapel Hill should receive $200,000 for its library and $150,000 for parks and recreation.

"We're giving it away still at that," Broadfoot said. "We're (Chapel Hill) more than half the county and we pay more than half the taxes. We're selling out too cheap."

Broadfoot said that only five towns in North Carolina with populations of more than 10,000 have municipal libraries, and that 30 percent of the people who used the Chapel Hill library live outside the city limits in Orange County.

Taylor said the county now provided

18 percent of the operating costs of the Chapel Hill library.

Some of the council members expressed concern over asking the county for more funds.

"It's going to arrive at the point where it's harassment to them (Orange County Commissioners) and they will cut it (the funding) out completely," said Mayor Joe Nassif.

"Unless we can show a disproportionate share of county residents using our facilities, I don't think I'd vote for it," Nassif said.

Council member Jonathan Howes said that he would be more comfortable asking for increases if he could be a little more confident about the statistical figures.

In other business, the council unanimously approved a resolution granting a special-use permit to Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity on Cameron Avenue. The permit was granted after discussion concerning a buffer area between the proposed lot for the new house and the adjacent church parking lot.

Following lengthy debate on the wording of a resolution, the council also approved a resolution which restructures the human services department. The approval was based on a recommendation from a mayoral task force and the town manager.

Question of funding

Council encourages support for clean water bond

By ALAN MARKS

The Triangle J Council of Governments, comprised of elected officials from 30 municipalities and six counties in the triangle area, recently passed a resolution urging support for the passage of the North Carolina Clean Water Bond Referendum. The resolution encourages state officials to schedule the referendum for the next statewide election.

The referendum, established in the Clean Water Act of 1981, would provide local governments with $300 million for water supply and wastewater projects. The money would be allocated on a statewide and county-wide basis by population.

If passed, Orange County would be guaranteed $1,048,052 and would be eligible for additional funding on a statewide basis, said Pat Davis, systems development manager for the Orange Water and Sewer Authority.

Davis said if the referendum was not passed, OWASA might have difficulty funding proposed projects such as the Cane Creek Water Supply Reservoir.

"We would have to come up with additional ways of financing certain projects," he said. "We would have to issue additional bonds or find alternate ways of financing such as through rate increases."

Funding from the 1977 Clean Water Fund soon will be exhausted, making a new referendum necessary. June 30 is the last day local governments and counties can apply for remaining water and sewer funds.

Davis said two applications were recently submitted to the state requesting the remainder of Orange County's allocations from the 1977 Clean Water Fund.

The requests totalled $573,750, he said. But there may be some problems in the passage of the referendum, Davis said.

"There had been some discussion to the method of financing the bonds," he said. "Some people are afraid it may mean an increase in the sales tax."

"Overall, hopefully, people will see the benefit in the bond act."
