Passover: Jews renounce leavened food

By LISBETH LEVINE
Staff Writer

Although there will probably be no visible change in the student diet at UNC in the next seven days, the food requirements at universities with larger Jewish populations like Syracuse and Brandeis will almost certainly be drastically altered.

Jews around the world renounced all foods which contain leavening for eight days last night Passover officially began.

Passover, or Pesach in Hebrew, commemorates the Jews' exodus from Egypt in the time of the pharaohs. Because there was not time for the bread to rise when the opportunity to escape appeared, the Israelites took the unleavened bread with them on their journey through the desert.

Every year at Passover, Jews celebrate their freedom by not eating bread. The ban on leavening encompasses much more than just bread, said Rabbi Frank Fischer, director of the Hillel Foundation for UNC and Duke. He listed anything that is fermentable as forbidden. This includes beer, liquor, cereal, peas, corn, oats and rice, as well as cakes, cookies, pretzels and bagels.

"No Jew can benefit from the sale of leavened products during Pesach," Fischer said, adding that in some parts of the world, most of the grocery stores are closed during Passover for this reason.

Instead of bread, Jews eat matzoh for the eight days. Matzoh is defined in a vague, fuzzy or incorrect manner by the students at UNC who have heard of it.

"It's Jewish, isn't it?" asked freshman Mike Hasson.

"I've had matzoh balls, but never the crackers," said Angie Van Lue, a freshman from Jacksonville. Jacky Jones, on the other hand, recalled trading her spaghetti and roll for fourth grade sweetheart Albert's matzoh sandwich. "Peanut butter and jelly on matzoh is the best," said Jones, a Resident Assistant in Ehringhaus.

Matzoh is actually a flat cracker which consists of flour and water. It is carefully prepared so that no fermentation occurs prior to baking.

A matzoh ball, which has no life outside of its chicken broth environment, is simply matzoh meal rolled into a ball and cooked.

Jewish women generally spend long hours in the kitchen at Passover, attempting to disguise the taste of matzoh in new recipes, since Weight Watchers has not yet marketed a "Kosher for Passover" T.V. dinner.

"Kosher for Passover," which is seen in the grocery stores on everything from Coca-Cola to gefilte fish, simply means that a rabbi has verified that the product did not come into contact with any form of leavening before he blessed it.

On the first two nights of Passover, seders are held. Seder means order in Hebrew, and refers to the elaborate procedures which surround the evening meal. Although many students' working knowledge of a seder is limited to the four glasses of wine which are consumed during the process, the purpose of the seder is to retell the story of how Moses led the Jews out of Egypt.

A seder plate rests in the center of the table. Certain significant items are arranged on the plate, and each of them symbolizes an important element in the Passover story.

A roasted shank bone represents the paschal lamb sacrifice which occurred each spring. It was the blood from this sacrifice which the Jews smeared on the doorposts of their houses to protect them when the Angel of David passed over Egypt, killing the first-born son.

The roasted egg stands for the special sacrificial offerings to the temple which take place in spring.

The maror, a mixture of nuts, apples, cinnamon and wine, resembles the mortar with which the Jews laid the bricks in Egypt.

The carpas, usually celery, is a symbol of spring which is dipped into salt water, a sign of the bitterness of slavery. The salt water has also been interpreted as the tears that the Israelites shed while in bondage.

And always in the center of the table is a welcoming glass of wine for the prophet Elijah. Just as Santa Claus's milk and cookies disappear, Elijah never fails to mysteriously enter the house during the night and drink his wine.

Hand-painted eggs are profitable for UNC grad

By LISBETH LEVINE
Staff Writer

People know it's spring in Chapel Hill when the outdoor vendors begin to reappear on Franklin Street. The first entrepreneur has been braving the fluctuating climate for three weeks as she sells hand-painted Easter eggs in front of the Methodist church on East Franklin.

Susan Crider, a 24-year-old artist who graduated from UNC two years ago, handpainted butterflies, zodiac signs, maps of Argentina and other designs on the hollowed eggs. For $1 extra, she will create a personal message on the egg. Some "Happy Easter" designs appear in her basket of eggs.

Crider's interest in egg painting began when she decided to make one as a birthday present for her sister. Her mother suggested that she try to sell the eggs for Easter.

"I wanted to sell them personally and not through a store," Crider explained, "so that I could do personal designs for people. I've gotten lots of positive feedback."

Crider estimated that each egg took two hours to complete. First she blows out the egg, then blocks out the outline for her design in magic marker. Crider next paints the eggshell in watercolors, and finally shellacks it. She stated that the eggs are fairly durable.

The eggs sell for $4 if they are mounted on a wooden base and $2.50 if they are loose. Although the business may not be considered lucrative by some, Crider said, "At least I'm able to buy groceries now."

At this point a young woman approached the table and after glancing at the eggs, asked, "How much is this?" After hearing the price, the woman rummaged through her purse and produced a $5 bill. She carefully inspected the eggs before choosing a multi-colored geometric design.

She explained that it was for her son. "It's Easter," she said. "He is sick. I like to cheer him up."

As Crider handed her the change, she told of a bus driver who pulled up to the curb with a bus full of children and bought six eggs.

"People are real interested," she continued. "A lot of people come over and talk to me. I have a lot of fun."

She reported that males, especially adult men, are her best customers.

"Must be the seller," commented a male friend as he smiled at the freckled, friendly blonde painting the eggs.
