UNC substantially. They seek to destroy the forum that the DTH provides because they do not agree with some of the ideas set forth in that forum. The plaintiffs are not identified with the DTH, and if they find it to be repugnant, they do not have to read it. If these three students were granted the relief they seek, the quality of the education of their fellow students (and their own, for that matter) would be diminished."

Kania said the judge's discussion of the case was "strange." "He bases his decision on their (the defendants') affidavits and makes no mention of ours."

Kania cited one section of the judge's memorandum as being contrary to his affidavits. It states, "In the letters to the editor column, disagreement with the editors of the DTH may be expressed by any student or member of the general public."

"We presented affidavits of several students that alleged that they could not have their letters printed," Kania said. "The judge's ignoring of this fact is strange."

If Kania does file for an appeal, it is possible that his student status at the University could affect the suit. If he graduates prior to the appeal, it is possible that the court could throw out the case on these grounds.

"If they would declare it moot (having no practical significance), there are several underclassmen willing to maintain the case as intervening plaintiffs," Kania said.

Ehringhaus, addressing the importance of the case, said, "I don't think this case addresses the question of the multiplicity of the media at UNC. It is important to distinguish between what is legal and what students decide to do among legal choices available to them."

increase prices and restrain activities of distributors.

He said that recent attempts to develop a comprehensive alcohol policy statement at UNC was rejected by University officials.

But now a task force of UNC administrators, faculty, students and community leaders to investigate the nature and extent of alcohol-related problems—first proposed by Jolly's classmates—may be forthcoming.

Rosemary Waldorf, assistant to Chapel Hill Mayor Joe Nassif, said we need "better town and University cooperation" to deal with alcohol-related problems.

Joe Harris, president of Harris Wholesale Inc. said he was interested "in trying to control excessive drinking situations" and would like to work with University and community officials in developing a policy.

our proposal on the grounds it is different was wrong. My major complaint is that the vote on Lenior Hall was done not on that basis of whether the renovations were practical but that Student Government's proposals were different and were denied."
