Tar Heel Days: a prelude to Carolina's fall orientation

By LISA PULLEN
Staff Writer

While most students are preparing for their exams during the next week, members of the UNC Orientation Commission are putting the finishing touches on next fall's Orientation program for new students.

The program officially swings into action Saturday with the beginning of Tar Heel Days. Tar Heel Days is a series of four summer Saturdays on which day-long orientation programs are held to give incoming students and their parents a preview of life at Carolina.

This year's Tar Heel Days will be held on June 26, July 10, July 17 and July 24-25. About 1,200 persons are expected at each Tar Heel Day, said Media Productions Coordinator Donald Beeson. The day's activities will include programs on financial aid and the General College for students, as well as a workshop for parents. A slide show on campus organizations will be shown and students and parents will visit students' future residence areas, Beeson said.

"Orientation focuses on students. Tar Heel Days tries to hit parents as well," Lister said.

The week-long fall orientation program will get underway with the arrival of freshmen and junior transfers on Sunday, August 15. Main attractions for this year's program include a new slide show to be shown in Carmichael, Beeson said.

"We're updating music and content and putting in some of the things they are going to experience in four years," Beeson said.

The Commission is also planning a "Culture Night" to expose new students to entertainment and cultural groups on campus, said Cathy Saunders, Freshman Program Coordinator. She said the Commission hoped to attract groups like the Black Student Movement, Clef Hangers, Loreleis and the Opeyo Dancers.

"When I was a freshman, I didn't know what all these different groups were," Saunders said. "We want to expose them early."

Saunders also said Orientation was going to concentrate more on academics. "Traditionally, Orientation has been a week-long party. We're really trying to emphasize academics."

Results of a recent survey of parents of incoming freshmen showed them to be concerned with academics even more than with financial aid, Lister said. As a result of this and the curriculum change, areas are holding mock drop/add programs and registration contests to award prizes to those who fill out their registration forms the most accurately, Saunders said.

To deal with the curriculum change, the 550 Orientation counselors will arrive one day earlier than usual to be trained in the new academic requirements, Lister said.

Reading tests which in the past have been administered in freshmen English classes will be given during the Orientation period, Lister said. This will allow students to see the results before registering for heavy reading loads unprepared, as well as alert students to the strenuous academics which lie ahead, Lister said.

The academic focus is carrying over into the Jr. Transfer Orientation program as well, said Neel Lattimore, chairperson for Transfer Orientation. Transfer Orientation will be "95% geared towards meeting academic needs," Lattimore said. "That is their main concern."

This year transfers will be assigned area coordinators within their major departments while orientation counselors will be assigned on the basis of their living areas, he said. Programs for the transfers will include advisor clinics, drop/add seminars and programs dealing with how to fulfill graduation requirements.

In addition to programs sponsored by the Orientation Commission, each residence area is planning events for its new students. Tentative plans include a dance sponsored by Granville and South Campus— "Grand Jam"—and a street party planned by Olde Campus and STOW, Saunders said. And within the individual areas new students can expect dinners, forums and parties.

Turner

Turner began building his cable empire in he bought a failing Atlanta TV station and beamed it by satellite to cable subscribers across the country. The station, now WTBS, shows old movies, sports (especially Braves games) and reruns of series, including "Gomer Pyle, USMC."

"It may not be uplifting, but it's sure a lot better than 'Dukes of Hazzard,'" Turner said. "Gomer's a nice guy from North Carolina."

Turner said "Dukes of Hazzard" glorifies reckless driving and makes the police look like a bunch of bumbling, corrupt idiots, and is one reason he believes NBC, CBS, and ABC have failed viewers. "I think we're going to see the three networks go down about the same way the (American) automobile industry did."

Turner said he was opposed to the sex and violence in television and movies, the kind which he said inspired John Hinckley to shoot the president. Also, he said network news treats viewers as if they were stupid, which he claims is changing somewhat due to the influence of his cable news stations.

Sports reporters, wanted to hear the yacht captain who skippered Courageous to two America's Cup defenses, and the sports franchise owner who props his feet on top of the dugout and chews tobacco at Braves games.

Sportscaster Don Shea of WTVD in Durham asked Turner to address the issue of alleged cocaine use among professional basketball players. "NBA players should know better. I'm more concerned about drugs among high school kids," Turner replied.

But he did talk some about sports. "We're going to be a dynasty," Turner said of his Braves team. "You can write that down: D-Y-N-A-S-T-Y"

The decision to release Gaylord Perry after his contract ran out, Turner said, was made because the Braves had too many young pitches who needed playing time. "We liked Gaylord, I went fishing with him right before the strike last year... But when you've got young pitchers ready to pitch in the major leagues you gotta let 'em pitch. You can't hold them back."
