'Yackety Yack' to paper rack, Carolina offers great diversity

By MARY EVANS
Staff Writer

Students at UNC this year will be able to find a diversified assortment of literary magazines and newspapers as well as radio and television stations to meet their varying needs and interests.

Most of the media organizations on campus are run by students and welcome those interested in working or in making contributions.

The Carolina Quarterly is a literary magazine that publishes fiction, poetry and photography from all over the world. The Quarterly is published three times a year, and is available at the Student Stores for $4 an issue.

The Quarterly receives a variety of funding, including grants from the North Carolina Arts Council, the National Endowment of Humanities, library subscriptions, individual patrons and student fees. The Carolina Quarterly office is located in Greenlaw Building.

The Cellar Door publishes poetry, prose and graphic works in a magazine format. All staff members and contributors are students.

The magazine is published once a semester, and is sold door to door, in the Carolina Union and in the Bull's Head bookshop in the Student Store. The Cellar Door is partially financed with student fees and funds from patrons.

Applications for staff positions on the Cellar Door are being accepted through Sept. 3, and contributions will be accepted through Sept. 20. The Cellar Door office is located in room 108-A in the Carolina Union.

The Black Ink is a bi-weekly newspaper and the official voice of the Black Student Movement. The Black Ink covers the activities of the BSM and in addition to all events and issues that concern blacks, both on campus and in the community.

The Black Ink is distributed at various drop sites on campus and in Chapel Hill. Students interested in working on The Black Ink should attend an organizational meeting scheduled for 6 p.m. Monday at the Upendo Lounge in Chase Cafeteria. Outside contributions also will be accepted.

The Agora is a magazine published every other year by the Association of International Students. The Agora contains fiction, poetry, art, recipes and personal accounts of students who have traveled abroad.

The editorial staff and contributors to the Agora are students, and occasionally articles by outside authors are published. Students interested in contributing to or obtaining a copy of the Agora should go by the International Center in the Carolina Union.

The Yackety Yack is the University yearbook, distributed each fall. It chronicles the events of the previous academic year.

The Yack is staffed entirely by students who work in various areas of production. Students interested in working as photographers, writers, or in sales and advertising for the Yack should go by its office in room 106 in the Carolina Union.

Funding for the Yack comes from individual subscriptions. Subscriptions for next year's Yack will be available approximately a month from now at a cost of $14 plus a $2 mailing charge for seniors.

The Daily Tar Heel is a daily newspaper published every day classes meet. The DTH covers campus news, sports and other activities as well as city, state and national news.

The Daily Tar Heel is available at no charge and is distributed in the mornings to drop boxes located at various spots around the campus. It is funded with student fees. Students interested in working for or contributing to the DTH should call or come by room 104 in the Carolina Union.

The Phoenix is a weekly tabloid news magazine that offers campus news and features, as well as interviews.

The Phoenix is located in room 108-D of the Carolina Union, and is accepting contributions and applications for staff positions.

The Phoenix is distributed to drop boxes around campus, and is also available in some residence halls and classroom buildings.

WXYC is a progressive rock station which broadcasts 24 hours a day, 365 days a year. Student disc jockeys play a variety of contemporary music, including pop, jazz, new wave and experimental music.

WXYC broadcasts on 89.3 FM, and requests can be made by calling 962-8989. The commercial-free station is funded with student fees.

WUNC is a classical music station which broadcasts on 91.5 FM, 19 hours a day on weekdays and 20 hours a day on weekends.

The station recently received a Corporation for Public Broadcasting award for its "Listen '81" pledge campaign, which raised more than 40 percent of its annual operating budget in five days of fund raising.

WUNC has students who work as volunteers at the station, and other students who work as announcers. The WUNC office is located in Swain Hall.

The UNC Center for Public Television offers instructional television programming from 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. This includes educational television, pre-school programs, and other programs designed to serve the needs and interests of viewers.

The UNC television station is a statewide network that presently has eight transmitters, with a ninth scheduled to open soon in Jacksonville, N.C. The station can be viewed locally on Channel 4.

The UNC Center for Public Television employs a paid student crew, and also some students involved in the work-study program.

'Phoenix' editor Galanes transfers to Yale

The Phoenix editor Phil Galanes has left UNC to attend Yale University in New Haven, Ct.

"I'm just not coming back to UNC because I'm not coming back," Galanes said in a phone interview this week. "I wouldn't have left UNC unless I were confident that The Phoenix would be well taken care of."

Galanes, who was a Morehead scholar, said he resigned the scholarship in June after learning of his acceptance at Yale.

Until the Media Board selects a new editor, Phoenix managing editor Janet Grady will serve as editor of the weekly publication.

Grady said she had been aware that Galanes might leave since May. "It's not like it's been totally dropped in my lap," she said.

Janet Grady

Grady also said she would apply for the position of editor. As acting editor, her duties will not differ much from those of the managing editor, she said.

"It's always been the case that everybody did whatever was necessary to get the paper out," she said.

The Media Board will open applications for The Phoenix position beginning tomorrow, said Media Board Chairman Joe Cannady. Applicants must submit a resume, three letters of recommendation, and must participate in an interview session Wednesday, Sept. 8.

"Whoever we select will fill the remainder of Phil's term (through the fall semester)," Cannady said.

SHS lines rival those at drop-add

By MARY EVANS
Staff Writer

For some 300 students standing in front of the Student Health Service before the doors opened last Wednesday morning, it was yet another long wait in the lines at UNC.

Students in need of medical clearances to register were required to go by the SHS before they would be allowed to proceed with registration. "Students were very worried about not being able to register and everyone came down as soon as possible," said Judith Cowan, SHS director. "Everyone came early to try and beat the crowds, and that created the problem."

SHS saw 1,280 students on Wednesday who needed clearance on their permit-to-register cards. Included were students who had not had any type of physical examination, about 400 students who had received pre-clearance but whose permit-to-register cards were not pre-stamped and students who may have had incomplete information on their physical forms.

While students had a variety of incomplete items on the physical forms, the single most incomplete item was the rubella vaccine, Cowan said.

The decision to require the rubella vaccine for all students under age 40 on the entrance physical was made last year and was effective this fall, Cowan said. Previously, the physical form only required proof of tetanus and tuberculin immunizations.

Because the forms for physicals are printed over a year in advance, an additional rubella form was included with the physical form that was sent to entering students.

"The two separate forms were probably more confusing than one single form would have been," and this may have accounted for the number of students who did not include the rubella information on their physical form, Cowan said.

Students who were missing proof of rubella immunity were given a semester to produce the information.

"Students were encouraged to try and provide some type of previous immunization records if possible, because we don't like to immunize students unnecessarily," Cowan said.

The decision to require the rubella vaccine was made because of important health reasons for adults. "Studies have shown that in a population the size of this university, between 10 and 20 percent of the people are not immune to rubella," Cowan said. The University suffered a rubella epidemic in 1980.

SHS does not anticipate any problems with people complying with the rubella requirement by the beginning of spring semester, Cowan said. More than 1,000 people already have some type of immunization records that will be sent in soon. However, those students who do not show some type of proof of immunity will not be allowed to register for next semester.

Future problems with the physical forms are already being considered, Cowan said. SHS would like to develop a form that would include all necessary information on just one physical form.

SHS officials are currently in discussion with the 16 schools in the UNC system which use the physical form to see what type of information would meet each school's needs, and what changes should be made in the form used presently.

SHS is also considering mailing students a pre-clearance card in the summer when their physical forms are received. "This would let students know that verification of their records has been received, and also give them something to bring with them in the fall to show proof of their pre-clearance," Cowan said.

This is the first year that the SHS has had such a large crowd of students to line up before the doors opened, and the first time that it has taken so long to process all the students through, Cowan said.

One reason for this is recent resignations in the medical records department that left the department unable to handle Wednesday's tremendous flow of students.

"We are trying to understand and work on the overcrowding problem," Cowan said. "We don't want students to have to wait in line, and we hope to avoid that situation in the future."

New UNC buildings approach completion

Construction sites which seemed to be just a pile of brick last semester are beginning to turn into recognizable buildings.

The new Davis Library should be completed by the beginning of 1983, said Charlie Davis, a consultant architect for the University. When the library will be ready for use "depends on how fast the University can move in," he said. It should take three months to move in and organize the new library, he said.

When the new library opens, Wilson

Library will house the Rare Book Collection, the Southern Historical Collection and the North Carolina Collection.

The art center beside Ackland Art Museum should be completed in a couple of months, Davis said. The facilities in this building include faculty offices, a library, classrooms, studios and lecture halls.

Work has begun on the new student activities center. The $30 million project should be ready for the 1984-85 basketball season. "We just started to grade and clear the land," Davis said. An Olympic-size pool and a practice gym will be included in the SAC. The building will be able to host concerts, Commencement and other sports in addition to basketball.

The new residence hall on Stadium Drive is still in the design stage, as is the Lineberger Cancer Research Center. The chemistry building beside Venable Hall is also still in the design stage, said Jake Bryant, director of engineering and construction in the UNC Planning Department. January of 1984 is the expected completion date for the cancer research center.

There have also been additions to older buildings. Three floors were added to the Health Sciences Library, and the addition to the School of Dentistry's office wing was completed this summer.
