N.Y. congressman pleads guilty to charges

The Associated Press

NEW YORK - Rep. Frederick Richmond, one of the richest members of Congress, resigned from office Wednesday after pleading guilty to federal charges including income tax evasion and marijuana possession in a deal to avoid further prosecution.

The 58-year-old Brooklyn Democrat faces sentencing on Nov. 12. The maximum penalty on the charges is seven years in prison and $20,000 in fines.

Richmond's pleas in U.S. District Court in Brooklyn ended a seven-year congressional career that was marred by a 1978 sex scandal and more recent allegations of financial and other improprieties.

Richmond pleaded guilty to three counts, resigned from Congress and agreed to take steps to withdraw his name from the Sept. 23 primary ballot in exchange for the government's promise that no further charges would be lodged against him.

Bea Dolen, executive director of the city Board of Elections, said Richmond had already missed the Aug. 13 cutoff for getting off the ballot. "He can only be removed by court disqualification," she

In the event his name is not removed from the ballot, Richmond agreed he would not serve a fifth term if re-elected in November.

In a five-line, hand-delivered letter stamped "received" in Washington at 12:11 p.m., Richmond submitted his resignation to House Speak Thomas P.

"It is with considerable and understandable regret and deep sadness that I submit my resignation as a representative of the 14th Congressional District of New York," Richmond wrote. "Copy of my statement is enclosed. All good wishes."

A federal grand jury had been investigating a variety of allegations against Richmond, including charges that he received cocaine from congressional aides and had received illegal payments from Walco National Corp., a timber and tool corporation he controlled.

Richmond's exact financial worth has not been made public, but his holdings in Walco amount to more than $30 million.

U.S. Attorney Edward Korman retained the right of the prosecutor to bring the findings of the grand jury to the judge's attention at sentencing.

Hours after Richmond's court session, Rep. Louis Stokes, D-Ohio, chairman of the House Ethics Committee, announced that it was dropping its investigation into Richmond's activities. Stokes said that as a result of Richmond's guilty plea and his resignation, the committee had no further jurisdiction.

Standing erect, with his head slightly bowed and hands neatly folded in front of him in a Brooklyn federal courtroom, Richmond answered "guilty" to each count read by U.S. District Judge Charles P. Sifton.

He was charged with evading paying of about $50,000 in income taxes on his 1981 tax return; illegally supplementing the salary of a civilian employee by arranging for an assignment to pay $7,420 for the college tuition of a Navy employee's daughter; and possessing marijuana obtained for him from his congressional

Neither the employee, his daughter or the college in question was named. "I arranged for the college tuition to be paid to show my gratitude for services performed for me and my staff," Richmond told the judge.

Asked by Sifton what those services were, the congressman said the Navy man had acted as a "liaison" between the Navy and Congress and assisted him in "obtaining information" that helped get business for the Brooklyn Navy yard in his district.

Richmond and his attorney quickly left the courthouse after the 10-minute session, refusing to talk with reporters blocking the entranceway.

In a written statement distributed by an aide, Richmond acknowledged that "These acts to which I have pleaded guilty were irresponsible, unnecessary, foolish and wrong."

He asked his constituents in the racially mixed 14th Congressional District to "understand and respect my motivation in resigning and in not seeking reelection..."

Outside the courtroom, Korman, who ended his four-year term as chief federal prosecutor of the Eastern District of New York on Wednesday, insisted that Richmond received no special treatment.

He called Richmond "a fairly tragic figure whose long public career has come to an end."

Richmond, a former New York City councilman, played a prominent role in the 1977 food stamp reform program, which abolished the requirement that recipients pay for their stamps.

His public career came under scrutiny in 1978 when the parents of a 16-year-old Washington youth complained to police that Richmond had solicited their son for

Richmond later admitted soliciting an undercover policeman who was sent to investigate him, but charges were dropped when Richmond entered a treatment program for first offenders.

Despite a tough primary fight, Richmond was re-elected in 1978.

New problems cropped up for Richmond last year when a judge in a federal suit involving Walco learned that Richmond had feigned retirement from the company to claim a $100,000 pension which he said was actually a salary.

The congressman was also accused in March of helping an escaped Massachusetts convict, Earl Randolph, get a job on the House staff. Randolph, who used the name John McLaughlin, had been serving an 18-year-sentence for assault with intent to kill.

Richmond denied knowing Randolph was a fugitive.

Security required at controversial dump site for PCB-laced soil

RALEIGH - Armed guards will protect the controversial Warren County landfill in which PCB-contaminated soil will be dumped and where vandals struck over the weekend, state officials said Wednesday.

Russ Edmonston, public information officer with the state Department of Crime Control and Public Safety, said security officers were scheduled to begin patrolling the landfill site Wednesday night. They'll be on duty whenever work is not going on at the landfill, Edmonston

"We felt that the best way to avoid further damage to the landfill and further delays in construction would be to hire security guards," he said. "We're already behind because of all the rain we've had and we can't afford more problems like

Authorities discovered Saturday night that someone had repeatedly slashed the plastic sheet lining the sides of the hole in which the soil is to be placed. Officials said repairs would cost $8,000.

Warren County sheriff's deputies and the State Bureau of Investigation are probing the vandalism. No one has been

The decision to hire guards was made by representatives of the state, the contractor and the design engineer, Edmonston said.

"We've got no reason to believe that this will happen again, but once it's done you have to prepare for it," he said. Repairs should be completed by Friday if needed materials being flown in from out of state arrive in time, Edmonston said. The plastic sheet will be patched with poly-vinyl chloride the same way a punctured tire is fixed, he said.

Once the repairs are finished, workers will continue preparing the landfill for its contents - soil containing toxic PCBs CHANGE FOR THE PARTY LEGY layer of sand underneath the plastic.

Several wells will be dug nearby to enable close monitoring of the site for any leakage, Edmonston said.

"This is a state-of-the-art landfill," he said. "We are doing all we can to ensure that it doesn't endanger anyone and we're confident it won't."

WASHINGTON — A special advocate, named by the Supreme Court to argue against federal tax breaks for racially biased private schools, said in a brief filed Wednesday that the Internal Revenue Service is correct in denying such tax relief. The court last October agreed to hear a challenge to the IRS ban filed by two Christian schools charged with racially discriminatory policies. They are Bob Jones University in Greenville, S.C., and the Goldsboro Christian Schools in Goldsboro,

On Jan. 8, the Reagan administration announced it intended to lift the 12-year-old IRS ban on tax relief for racially biased schools and asked the high court to drop the appeal. The action raised a storm of protest among blacks, civil rights groups and others.

Later, in a reversal, the Justice Department asked the court on Feb. 25 to go ahead and decide, after all, the legality of the ban.
