according to airport officials and television reports. Several explosions followed and the plane caught fire.

About 250 members of emergency medical and rescue teams were at the scene. The Soviet ambassador and other embassy personnel also were at the airport.

Rescue workers brought powerful lights to the scene of the crash and called out for survivors in several languages, including Russian.

RTL television said it was the first major air disaster in the history of this tiny grand duchy of about 30,000, surrounded by Belgium, West Germany and France.

In Metz, France, the Freyming Merlebach Burn Center was placed on alert and emergency teams were called in to treat burn victims.

Traffic controllers in the airport tower said the pilot had approached from the west and landed without instruments because weather conditions were good.

"The air was clear, there was no mist or anything," according to one local reporter.

Luxembourg airport officials said the Il'yushin was scheduled to continue on to Lima, Peru, after the stop in Luxembourg, where 15 passengers were to get off.

The worst reported crash of an Aeroflot airliner was last July 6.

An Il'yushin-62 crashed shortly after takeoff from Moscow's Sheremetyevo Airport, and Western sources said about 90 people were killed. Soviet authorities did not release a casualty figure for the crash, which was the sixth known air disaster involving an Il-62 or its sister plane, the Il-62m.

The worst reported disaster involving a Soviet airliner was Oct. 13, 1972, when 176 people perished in the crash of an Il'yushin jet in Moscow.

scholarship committee conducts personal interviews. "We look for excellent students who represent themselves well orally, or they won't fare well at the county level," said Phil Watkins, senior class counselor.

Because the selection process is so competitive and the selections are based on interviews, many North Carolina schools coach their nominees on how to present themselves. "It's very important, that interview," Watkins said. "We work with them on their presentation, fire questions at them on current events, their future plans...."

There are 37 American independent and 24 British schools which also send nominees to the final competition. The schools were picked because of their reputation. Most are in the Northeast, but this year 13 Southern schools were added to balance the list. Pritchett said.

Phillips Exeter Academy in Exeter, N.H., nominates students from a list of those who express an interest in the scholarship, as well as the 10 or 20 top scholars in the school, said Rick Mahoney, dean of students.

A five-member panel studies the potential nominees and picks two who are qualified and interested in attending UNC to send to the final competition.

"We could nominate, without thinking, two or three of our best kids," he said. "We think that's not fair to the University." Instead, only those interested in UNC are sent, he said.

At Groton School in Groton, Conn., the top seniors in the class are selected regardless of their interest, said college adviser Charles Alexander.

"Being from the Northeast, most of our kids have thought of North Carolina from the start," he said. "The kids are aware of the tremendous opportunity the program provides."

Neither Groton nor Phillips Exeter coach their nominees before the competition. "We're confident in them after 18 years," Mahoney said.

Of the approximately 120 students who were in the final competition this winter, 81 were selected. Seventy-seven accepted. Those who did not get the scholarship were offered a merit tuition award, which pays full tuition costs.

The nominees went before a 20-member committee for a 15 minute interview. The committee asks each nominee a "thought" instead of factual question, Pritchett said.

Michelle Volpe, a sophomore from West Hartford, Conn., said she was sure she'd lost the scholarship after she appeared before the committee. "Those interview questions were weird," she said. "They asked me, 'What makes a nice little girl like you angry?' I thought my interview was terrible."

Volpe received a Morehead Scholarship, but Summey Orr, a senior from Monroe, did not.

"My feeling was that it was kind of a toss-up," he said. "I thought they'd already made their decision from looking over our recommendations and records."

"There were a lot of people I met that weekend that I thought were shoe-ins. But many didn't make it. I guess you've got to draw the line somewhere."

Mebane Pritchett agreed that many times the large amount of information on grades and activities which the central committee has in front of them is very much a deciding factor in the final selections.
