Professors predict Schmidt ouster

By SUSAN SULLIVAN
Staff Writer

UNC professors predict West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt will be voted out of office today, when the scheduled vote of confidence is taken in the national parliament.

On Sept. 17, the longstanding coalition between Schmidt's party, the Social Democrats, and the Free Democrat Party collapsed, and now Schmidt's entire government appears on the brink of collapse. Four ministers of the FDP resigned under the leadership of Hans-Dietrich Genscher, an ex-foreign minister and leader of the Free Democrats. The coalition had given Schmidt a parliamentary majority that enabled him to govern.

The Free Democrats are negotiating a coalition with the Christian Democrats said Donald Haynes, a graduate student teaching Western European politics. While the Free Democrats had not entered into a coalition with the Social Democrats rival party, "the Free Democrats have hammered out with the CDU (Christian Democrats) a tentative compromise on party position," he said. The Christian Democrats have proposed a constructive vote of no confidence for today, in an attempt to remove Schmidt from office.

Dr. Jurg Steiner, of the UNC Political Science department, said that in a constructive vote of no confidence in Germany, the parties may agree to overthrow a government (meaning the executive branch), but they must be able to agree on a candidate for Chancellor who would win a majority of the vote in parliament.

He said he believed that Helmut Kohl would be the new chancellor following the vote.

Kohl, leader of the Christian Democrats, must have the votes of all the members of his party, but also the votes of at least 23 of the 53 members of parliament in the Free Democratic Party. Steiner said, "I expect enough Free Democrats will follow for the vote to pass."

But the Free Democrats suffered a setback Sunday in the state elections of Hesse, where they were completely ousted from the state parliament. The party received less than 5 percent of the popular vote, which eliminated them from parliament.

Dr. James White, of the UNC Political Science department, said a party in West Germany must get at least 5 percent of the popular vote in a legislative election to have representatives in parliament.

A newcomer to German politics, a party calling itself the Greens, wrested votes away from the Free Democrats, winning 8 percent of the vote, and nine seats in the 110 seat parliament. Steiner described them as "a pro-environment, anti-nuclear, pro-peace organization — a very heterogeneous group." He said the Greens would be an important political power to watch in the future. The party has already won seats in six out of the 11 state parliaments in Germany.

The election also gave surprising support to the Social Democrats. The party received a percentage of the vote only slightly less than that of the Christian Democrats. The Social Democrats won 42.8 percent and the Christian Democrats won 45.6 percent of the vote.

White said a major issue dividing Schmidt's party now is the NATO proposal to position 572 medium-range missiles in Europe. He said, "The missile issue has practically torn the Social Democrats apart."

If Kohl were to become West Germany's new chancellor, neither Steiner nor White said there would be any major changes in West Germany's foreign policy stance. And Steiner added there would be no radical changes in relations with the United States.

"The new government would probably be less harsh in their criticism," Steiner said. He added that there would be some change in West Germany's relations with the Soviet Union under Kohl. "They would be a little tougher with the Soviets and East Germany."
