Big Ten teams strengthen field

Tar Heel golfers host invitational

By EDDIE WOOTEN
Staff Writer

Finley Golf Course will be the site this weekend for the Seventh Annual Lady Tar Heel Invitational golf tournament, and Carolina women's golf coach Dot Gunnells said she was excited about the strength of this year's field.

"We have some real strong teams from the Big Ten," Gunnells said Wednesday. "Ohio State won at Kentucky (Lady Kat Invitational) last week, and Kentucky has been strong this year. Duke has won two tournaments, and you can't count out the Florida schools, either. We're excited and looking forward to it."

The Lady Tar Heels finished second in last year's tournament. Gunnells said she hopes her team can improve on last year's 892 score with which they finished behind Georgia. Georgia is not defending its title because of scheduling conflicts.

Gunnells does not cite a home-course advantage for her team to capture the championship. "Everyone expects a home-course advantage, which is something I think adds more pressure," she said. "I don't really know how much of an advantage it is, except that the girls should certainly know how the ball breaks (on the putting green)."

"You always like to win your own tournament, and we'd really like to win this one," she added.

The Lady Tar Heels have struggled this fall to regain their status as a national power. Last season they finished 12th in the AIAW National Tournament and 16th in the NCAA Women's Golf Tournament. But Carolina lost Jill Nesbitt and Carla Daniel to graduation. Then All-American Linda Mescan broke her leg this fall when she was hit by a car after practice. Mescan, counted on as a top performer for this season, has been redshirted.

"We've been up and down this fall," Gunnells said. "We have not been consistent. I've played some different people and have not played the same lineup in any tournament."

"The thing we need to work on most is consistency," she said. "We have some freshmen and sophomores who, due to the strength of last year's team, did not play. We need to get some experience under our belts. We'll be all right."

Cathy Johnston, a freshman from Wilmington, will be the No. 1 player this season. Johnston, ranked as the No. 2 junior golfer in the nation by Golf Digest magazine, won the individual title at Memphis State's tournament earlier in October. Page Marsh, a sophomore from Jamestown, has the lowest scoring average thus far, while Cathy Reynolds fills the third spot. Because of inexperience, the fourth and fifth spots are still open and Gunnells is hoping for those positions to be strengthened.

While Carolina, Ohio State, Duke and Kentucky are four tough teams to beat, there will be strong competition from South Florida and Florida International. Indiana, also in the field, has won a tournament this fall.

Gunnells said that the key to winning the tournament will be "putting three good days together. It will take par or one- or two-over-par to win," she said.

The 54-hole tournament begins Friday and ends Sunday. Eighteen teams, including two from Carolina, will compete.
