

governor

times to be one of the most capable fund raisers in North Carolina. "There's nobody better at raising funds than Ed Milby," he said.

Carmichael said Ed Milby was pleased with the 1982 election outcomes. "He did more campaigning for the Democratic party than any other public official in the state with the exception of Gov. Hunt," he said. "He views the strong Democratic surge in the state as promising."

State Insurance Commissioner John Ingram is expected to run on the Democratic ticket. "As far as I'm concerned he will be in the race," said Oscar Smith, spokesman for Ingram.

Smith said Ingram would be a popular candidate among young people because of his involvement over the years in affairs dealing with young people.

Ingram has not yet begun planning his campaign. Smith said, since he was involved with the 1982 elections. He did mention education, health costs, unemployment and energy conservation as concerns of Ingram's. "John has always been an issue-oriented politician," he said. Smith quoted Ingram as saying government should "make sure free enterprise works for all of our citizens. We need to get government closer to the people."

Lt. Gov. Jimmy Green has also given the Democratic nomination a great deal of consideration, said Weldon Denny, assistant to Green.

After 21 years in the General Assembly, Green has the name recognition needed for support, Denny said. He stressed that while many candidates would have to spend a great deal of money on media-oriented campaigns, Green already had popularity within the state.

The economy would play a major role in Green's campaign; however, Denny said other matters would be just as important. "Anybody running for governor will have to think about other issues than the economy," he said. He cited education, Medicare and welfare as other probable focal points.

June Milby, spokeswoman for the state Democratic party, said she learned a long time ago that things could change drastically over a two-year period. "A day is a lifetime," she said.

Milby said a lot of candidates had not yet surfaced and a lot of those who had would change their minds. "Certainly the Democrats will be going into the race in a strong position," Milby said. However, she added that it all depends on the economy. She said many Hunt supporters would back any candidate on the Democratic ticket, but she said she did not expect the governor to support any particular candidate. "The governor will be interested in his race," Milby said.

Gary Pearce, press secretary to Hunt, said the last thing the governor was going to do was endorse any gubernatorial candidate in 1984. "He will stay strictly neutral," he said.

Pearce said there would be rumors of candidates having the governor's support; however, these would all be unfounded. "It doesn't help them to be seen as a governor's candidate," he said. "And it's just not smart for the governor."

Possible candidates who have been encouraged to run but have not made their decisions yet are I. Beverly Lake, 2nd District Rep. Charlie Rose D-N.C. and Charlotte Mayor Eddie Knox. Each of them said they had been looking at the possibility of running for governor in 1984; however none would say what their plans were at this time.

Lake, a former Republican state senator, said he had had a great deal of encouragement to try for the nomination, especially since the 1982 elections. He said a committee had been formed to explore the possibility of his candidacy; however, he himself was not a part of the committee. The group already had begun raising money and organizing political strategy for Lake.

Unlike some other candidates, Lake said he thought he had a good amount of popularity in the state due to his campaign in 1980. "Because of my past political activities I have a generally recognizable name," he said. He added, however, that a Hunt-Helms race in 1984 would take away some attention from the gubernatorial race. "Assuming there is a Hunt-Helms senate race, I think there's a good possibility the governor's race would be somewhat overshadowed by that," he said.

Lake said education would play a major role in the issues discussed during his campaign because there was so much money being wasted on education now. "It will take the people in the state to improve it (the education system)," he said. "It's just need direction."

A media-oriented campaign would have to be waged for the election, Lake agreed. However, he said he did not like that kind of campaigning as much as getting out with the people. "It (the campaign) will be a combination of both," he said. "I want to devote a lot of time to traditional campaigning."

Rose said he had been thinking about the possibility of running for governor, but he said he also had been looking ahead to the senate race in 1986. He has not yet made his decision as to which he would rather try for; however, he said he had accepted speaking engagements around the state. He said he was too preoccupied with the next session of congress to make a decision now but he planned to finalize his intentions in 1983.

A lot of people in the state were dissatisfied with the names being mentioned as possible candidates thus far, Rose said; therefore he said he thought he would have a great deal of support. Rose said he did not expect the governor's support if he decided to try for the nomination. "I don't expect Gov. Hunt to get involved with the governor's race," he said. "My hope would be that many of his supporters and followers would be with me if I decided to run." He said that was what he was checking on now.

Rose said despite his lack of name recognition he believed he could do the best job for the state. "I don't think there's anyone who can do a better job than me," he said. Because of his background in computers, Rose said making North Carolina the technology center of the South would be the major focal point in his gubernatorial campaign. "I know that's where the high paying jobs of the next decade will be," he said. "It needs special attention."

Rose's other area of concentration during his campaign would be on increasing the motivation of the people of North Carolina. "How do you motivate the people of the state to reach their full potential?" he questioned. "Human potential has barely been tapped."

Should he decide to run, Rose said he would have his entire ten year voting record published. This would make the public aware of his record as well as prevent people from criticizing minor decisions he had made in the past, he said.

Rose also agreed that the 1984 senate race would take some of the limelight away from gubernatorial campaigning. He said Hunt and his political organization so overshadowed any other political group in the state that people were getting the feeling that whoever was deciding to run for governor did not "have it all together yet." "Dim stars pale in the presence of bright stars," he said.

Knox said he had not made his final decision yet, but he had been traveling around the state and meeting people. "I'm doing what any other candidate does at this point," he said.

Knox said it was too premature to make an official announcement, however he said he was at least committed to campaigning.

Key issues in his campaign would include unemployment, better industrial relations and better education within the state. He also said traditional issues, he said. "These are pretty traditional issues," he said.

Knox said he was also interested in long range planning for the environment and the educational system. He said he had a group working on these issues now.

The media would have to play a big part in his campaign, Knox said. "Of all the candidates, I'm the least known, they say," he said. He added that he did not think name identification would be a big problem.

Flaherty said he expected the 1984 race to carry as much weight as it had in the past. He said a Hunt-Helms battle would not hurt the election, but added that "it would be favorable to our (Republican) candidate for governor," Flaherty said. "We're expecting a very lively and exciting race with a very large turnout."

BRIEFLY

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. — The space shuttle returned to Earth Tuesday as a tried-and-true carrier of space cargo, its commander exulting, "Yes sir, we deliver."

With dawn's early light shining off the American flag on its side, the shuttle cut through desert clouds to a centerline landing.

"We've been on a fantastic voyage," Vance Brand said.

The spacecraft commander steered Columbia over California's Mojave Desert and glided to a smooth stop with more than 5,000 feet of concrete left.

"Are we down now? Are we on the ground?" he joked.

"Absolutely, it was beautiful," said Roy Bridges at the console in Mission Control. "You certainly lived up to the motto on this flight. Welcome home."

Columbia flight five was the first operational mission of the world's first reusable spacecraft. Now, with more than 10 million miles on its flight log, the ship is scheduled for a 10-month grounding while it is overhauled.

Challenger, the next ship in the fleet, is being readied at Cape Canaveral to make the next three flights, beginning Jan. 24. James Abrahamson, NASA's associate administrator for space flight, said the space walk canceled on Monday because of space suit failures may be taken then "if we are certain we understand exactly what went wrong and have corrected it."

WASHINGTON — Spurred by higher costs for new cars, wholesale prices rose 0.5 percent in October, according to government reports released Tuesday. The modest increase, while reversing an actual drop the previous month, was seen as "good news" at the White House, but a related report showed another slip in factory output and portended more layoffs and lingering recession.

Despite last month's comparative surge, wholesale inflation stands at a modest annual pace of about 3 percent for the first 10 months. October's rate would translate to 5.7 percent if it held for a year.

Continually moderate food and fuel prices were more than offset by the spurt in prices for new cars and trucks as manufacturers terminated discounts given to dealers in September to clear their inventories of 1982 models.

The growth in October followed a 0.1 percent decline in wholesale prices the month before. But Deputy White House press secretary Peter Roussel said the Labor Department's report was "good news" and "indicates we're winning the battle against inflation."
