Community Kitchen nourishes needy

By ASHLEY DIMMETTE Staff Writer

Charlie Frushie sat back and laughed. The wrinkles in his dark face lightened and his eyes danced as he talked about the "good ol' days." Charlie was reminiscing about the days when he was a cook at the Sigma Chi Fraternity. He particularly relished the Homecoming weekends when he and the boys would make up a vat of "jungle juice" and party.

"Those boys were somethin' else!" Charlie exclaimed as he took another spoonful of soup. "And I've cooked for nearly all the fraternities at Chapel Hill."

. Charlie is a regular at the Community Kitchen. His is just one of the many stories the volunteers can listen to as they prepare and serve food for the needy people who come in daily to each lunch. The Community Kitchen is an organization, funded by the Inter-Faith Council of Chapel Hill whose main purpose is to supply prepared food for the needy in the Chapel Hill-Carrboro area.

The Carrboro Masons donated space in their lodge on the corner of W. Rosemary

Health administration conference set

The department of health policy and administration in the UNC School of Public Health will hold its first Health Administration Undergraduate Alumni Conference today from 7:30 to 9 p.m. in the School of Public Health auditorium. A reception will follow immediately in the and Sunset streets to the Community Kitchen for a three-month trial period which started Nov. 1.

Laurie Alexander, a volunteer from the Chapel of the Cross, said the number of people coming into the Community Kitchen had grown. "We see faces every week, and we're having a steady increase every day," she said. "As it's gotten colder the number has grown."

Though the Community Kitchen is funded by the Inter-Faith Council, most of its food sources come from donations. The donations come from churches, volunteers and restaurants in the area. One day, for instance, the Bread Shop donated bread for meals and Pyewacket donated some broccoli stems. Such University organizations as the Campus Y, Inter-Varsity and the Wesley Foundation have also agreed to donate their time.

And Mark Zink, a cook at Pyewacket, comes in once a week to put his culinary skills to a test with the sometimes meager sources.

"Last week all we had was green beans, so I whipped up green bean soup - what is important is making an edible soup to give them nourishment," he explained.

McGavran Room.

All health administration students and alumni are invited to discuss academic and professional aspects of health administration programs and careers. Call 966-3141 for more information.

Another volunteer, sophomore Paul Kiyonaga, said, "The purpose of the soup kitchen is to establish a community, because you don't get a community by talking about a problem. You get a community by doing something about it."

Not only does the community benefit but so do the volunteers. Williams said, "The volunteers get something in that there is a genuine exchange between the person who's serving and the person who's receiving. The volunteers walk away with a feeling that they have made a contribution to the community, which is reinforced to the volunteer that they are doing something for mankind."

Senior Linda Roetman, publicity coordinator for the Community Kitchen, said, "The Inter-Faith Council was right there was a need and we are fulfilling it."

The Community Kitchen is open from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. Monday through Friday.

WASHINGTON - Wielding both stick and carrot, President Reagan announced Monday he intends to deploy the huge MX missle in a "dense-pack" string of Wyoming silos. then prepared to advance new arms control proposals to the Soviet Union.

Hours before the formal announcement, all signs indicated the president had accepted the Air Force recommendation to place 100 MX weapons in super-hardened launch silos spaced about 1,800 to 2,000 feet apart near Warren AFB in Wyoming.

The untested theory behind the dense-pack plan is that most of the MX missles could survive a Soviet surprise attack because incoming Soviet warheads would disable each other as they converged on the MX silos and exploded. The plan faces a doubtful future in Congress.

WASHINGTON - The two top leaders in Congress agreed Monday to push for swift passage of a highway construction jobs measure in the lame-duck session of Congress that begins next week. The plan would include an increase in the federal gasoline tax.

Senate Republican Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., had met privately with House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr.,

Baker said he and O'Neill had assigned aides to begin work on a bill that could win swift bipartisan approval, but said no decisions had yet been made on the size of the gasoline tax increase to be proposed. The current tax is four cents a gallon.
