But Scott Templeton, Residence Hall Association president, said the current ordinance was too restrictive. He agreed that there had been no problems with the ordinance on campus this semester, but he said that did not mean he liked the ordinance.

"I think it's fairly stupid," Templeton said. He said a more realistic law was needed that would make allowances for "spontaneous amplified music."

Gold said although the police department had sent a number of warning letters to off-campus students, including fraternities, cooperation with the ordinance by students had been good.

However, one officer estimated that fraternities were involved in as many as 85 percent of the town's noise ordinance violations.

The number of noise ordinance violations at fraternity houses was down from last year, said Joel J. Hughey, Interfraternity Council president. Part of the reason, he said, was that more parties had moved indoors because of the ordinance.

Most of the violations resulted from students' misunderstanding of the law, Hughey said. For example, he said, a person playing a stereo with his windows open could be in violation of the noise ordinance, even if that situation was not specifically addressed by the ordinance.

The ordinance does make exceptions for some specific situations and events. All town church bells are exempt, for example, as well as the bells in the Bell Tower and on South Building. All town street fairs, such as the annual Apple Chill Festival, also are exempt.

Each semester, Gold said, students simply need to be re-educated about the noise ordinance. Hughey said he hoped to arrange a meeting between Gold and fraternity officers so that the law's provisions would be understood.

Straley said it was possible for students to comply with the current ordinance and still bother the neighbors. Even so, he said, students had done a reasonably good job of keeping the noise down.

Apply now for Manchester exchange

Students interested in participating in the UNC-Manchester Student Exchange Program can pick up applications any time from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. in the American studies office in 227 Greenlaw Building. The exchange program with the University of Manchester in England, which is sponsored by UNC's curriculum in American studies, is open to all UNC students. meet their degree requirements at the University.

There will be a meeting with the exchange students from Manchester and the American studies staff for all interested students at 3:30 p.m. on Thursday, Dec. 2 in 225 Greenlaw. Applications are due Jan. 21, and the selection process will be completed by Feb. 15. Contact Debbie Riggsbee in Greenlaw 227 for more information.

dent accountability suggested by Audit Board Chairperson Don Yount.

Under the new plan, an outside CPA firm will be brought in to study both the DTH's business procedures and needs, as well as the role of SAFO. The firm will then recommend a procedure by which the DTH can operate efficiently through SAFO and still ensure an adequate amount of accountability to students.

"It will be expensive," Yount said. "But the CPA firm will bring a lot of integrity into the situation."

Yount said that simply making up a new set of requisition rules for the DTH as the Finance Committee had planned last week would not alleviate any basic problems between the DTH and SAFO.

At Yount's suggestion, the Finance Committee approved a plan to hire the Atlanta-based accounting firm Burnstein and Landis, because Burnstein had been personally auditing the SAFO books for many years. The procedure also will cost less because it would take Burnstein less time to evaluate the situation, Madison said.

The committee placed a $5,000 limit on the cost of the study.

But when Madison presented the proposal at the DTH Board of Directors meeting later Tuesday night, several board members agreed with the overall plan, but disagreed with using Burnstein and Landis.

Madison agreed with the DTH board that the consulting firm should be objective, and also agreed that a local, less expensive firm would be acceptable, as long as SAFO approved.

The Audit Board will choose a new accounting firm, Madison said.

In other business, the Finance Committee unfroze the Black Student Movement's funds so that the organization could resume business and take care of any in-current debts. The committee acted on recommendations of the Audit Board, which conducted an investigation into the BSM finances last week after several fiscal discrepancies, including eight late requisitions.

Audit Board Chairperson Yount said that the BSM "has no formal set of books that their treasurer can find."

The committee decided that the BSM would undergo a "review period" of 18 months, during which their books would be audited monthly until May 15, and quarterly thereafter.

The committee also decided that the BSM should work with Student Body Treasurer Brent Clark to set up new books and a feasible requisition system. The BSM would then have to present a flow chart to the Finance Committee, outlining this system on February 15, 1983.

In subsequent action, the Finance Committee also made a subsequent appropriation of $680 to the Student Consumer Action Union. With those funds, SCAU and the Residence Hall Association will jointly print a booklet outlining the new cooking regulations. The booklet also will provide hints on purchasing accepted cooking appliances and recipe suggestions for a fuller use of the appliances, said Scott Templeton, RHA president.

The 6,000 copies — 25 pages each — will be distributed to each dormitory room next semester, Templeton said.

The Finance Committee also passed an appeal by several student organizations to have a referendum asking for an increase in Student Activity fees put on the campus election ballot next semester.

The organizations cited increased costs as the basis for the requested fee increase. The referendum student fees would be raised by $2.50 each semester if the CGC and the student body approve such a raise.

The last student fee increase was in 1977.

RALEIGH — General state tax collections rose 5.1 percent in October, a disappointing rate that gives no reason for optimism about economic recovery, Revenue Secretary Mark Lynch said Monday.

Corporate and individual income taxes were up in October, compared to the same month in 1981, but sales and use taxes, an indicator of consumer spending, actually declined compared to October 1981.

To accommodate the tax shortfall and avert a deficit at the end of the fiscal year, Gov. Jim Hunt has ordered a 6 percent cutback in state spending.

WASHINGTON — Budget Director David Stockman's latest estimate shows a budget deficit for the current fiscal year of between $180 billion and $190 billion, higher than any previous administration forecast, government sources said Monday.

Sources said Stockman's estimate, already presented to President Reagan and his closest White House aides, assumes an economy expanding at the rate of about 3 percent next year. Without the recovery, the deficit presumably could balloon even higher.

Thus, the deficit would be in the range of $250 billion in 1987, the year in which a balanced budget would be required under a proposed constitutional amendment that Reagan favors.

GENEVA, Switzerland — An 88-nation trade conference on Monday dashed U.S. hopes of phasing out Common Market farm subsidies and winning Third World concessions on trade barriers, approving a final declaration that skirted both issues.

The compromise document, watered down in marathon bargaining over the weekend, committed GATT members to resist protectionist trade barriers erected to protect weak domestic industries.

But, under objections from the Common Market and elsewhere, it dropped a previous draft's pledge to refrain from protectionism, as well as a U.S.-backed text that would have called for dismantling existing protectionist measures.

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court rejected on Monday the attempt by Richard M. Nixon to block public access to his White House tapes, meaning Americans will be able to listen in, as early as 1984, to most of the recorded conversations through 2½ years of his presidency.

The decision applies to thousands of hours of Oval Office talks not related to the Watergate scandal that drove Nixon from office eight years ago.

In other action Monday, the high court agreed to consider creating an exception to the rule barring illegally seized evidence from use at criminal trials.

In a case that could lead to major changes in law enforcement, the justices will decide whether such evidence can be used when police act in a reasonable, but erroneous, belief that they are not violating a defendant's constitutional rights.

NEW YORK — Astronomers using radio telescopes in West Virginia and Puerto Rico said Monday they have identified the largest structure ever found in the universe, a string of galaxies stretching halfway across the sky.

This filament of galaxies is about 700 million light years long and 100 million to 200 million light years from earth, making it about 10 times the size of previously identified galactic clusters, the researchers said. A light year is the distance light travels in one year — some 6 trillion miles.

The galaxies extend from the constellation Pegasus to the Big Dipper.

Marc Davis, a professor of astronomy and physics at the University of California at Berkeley, said this research and previous reports of chains of galaxies suggest that the universe is composed almost entirely of neutrinos, sub-atomic particles that might make up what's called the "missing mass" of the universe.
