according to the CGC By-Laws. If the Student Supreme Court rules in favor of Painter, Kelly said that "the votes would never be counted and it will be as if the referendum never existed." However, if the court rules in favor of Vogler, the votes will be counted, he said. In his request for a restraining order, Painter

. There was not ample time for the referendum issue to be debated in the media. The Student Constitution states that there must be six days between the date of a referendum approval and the actual referendum. But Wednesday's vote gave only three school days - including today - in which the issue could be debated,

• The outcome of the referendum vote could harm Painter's case against Vogler. If the fee increase referendum passed by a significant number his case - that the CCC's approval of the referendum was illegal - would be damaged, Painter charged.

"There simply has not been enough time for students, to debate the issue, whether among themselves or in the press," he said Monday Painter also pointed out that the sixth calendar day after the CGC vote would be tonight, after the referendum had actually been voted Painter's complaint states that the CGC's approval of the referendum was illegal because: . • The CGC was improperly called to order because of lack of quorum.

· All of the CGC members were not notified of the special meeting three days in advance of Wednesday's meeting.

. There was no quorum when the vote was

"We felt our opinion wasn't weighed heavily," Halpern said. The students proposed several solutions, including holding class on Labor Day and moving the calendar up a week in August, she said.

The Labor Day idea was nixed because it is a state holiday, and University support staff would not be working, Halpern said.

Faculty members were opposed to moving the calendar up a week because of the short break it would give them between the end of the summer session and the beginning of the fall, Halpern said. The 1983 second summer session is scheduled to end Aug. 9.

Strong said the current calendar was a compromise. "Everybody on the committee agreed this was the best way. I don't think it's a solution anyone liked."

Strong is in the process of finalizing next fall's exam schedule, he said, and is trying to schedule less popular exam times in the middle period of days with three exams scheduled.

"That will work fine if the departments don't fill them up with common exams," Strong said. Departments will be scheduling common exams this week. Strong will make the final decision about the exam schedule, he said.

"It's possible someone could have three exams in one day," he said. Traditionally, the rule has been that students

But the policy is "de facto" rather than official, said Maria Baxter, Student Government Educational Policy Committee chairperson. She and Academic Procedures Committee chairperson Dennis Whittle have spent the last few months trying to get an official three-in-row exam policy approved by the Faculty Council's Educational Policy Committee.

"We see it not only beneficial to students but to faculty," Baxter said. A formal policy could "alleviate the crunch" of students trying to reschedule exams at the end of the semester, she Gunshots were fired at two more trucks Monday, bringing the number of North Carolina shooting incidents in the nationwide independent truckers' strike to 23.

Meanwhile, police in Ohio seized 17 people on rioting charges Monday in the biggest of the independent truckers' strike, and the strike leader later told reporters the shutdown may last another week.

RALEIGH - State Revenue Secretary Mark Lynch said Monday there is a "burst of sunshine" in January revenue collections, which appear to have grown 15.5 percent over collections in January 1982.

The 1982-83 budget was based on predictions that revenues would grow 8.9 percent for the year. The tentative figures released Monday show revenues growing 6 percent

The statistics were released one day before the joint House-Senate Appropriations Committee was to hold a meeting to outline goals for reducing proposed state spending in the 1983-84 budget.

WASHINGTON - The nuclear core of a derelict Soviet spy satellite plunged to obliteration over the South Atlantic on Monday, leaving a scorched, radioactive trail to dissipate harmlessly in the upper atmosphere. Although the chances were minimal that fuel would land on the North American continent, U.S. search teams totaling 200 people stood by until the satellite disappeared off tracking screens.

VANCOUVER, Wash. - Mount St. Helens erupted again Monday, building a new mound of lava on the 700-foot high dome in the volcano's crater.

On Saturday, the U.S. Geological Survey and the University of Washington warned that movement within the crater and gas emissions indicated that Mount St. Helens would erupt within two weeks.
