

Union appoints president for 1983-1984 term

By HEIDI OWEN
Staff Writer

Lucia Halpern, a sophomore from Charlotte, has been selected as Carolina Union president for the June 1983-June 1984 term.

Halpern, chosen Thursday by the Union Board of Directors, will replace Wayne Plummer, 1982-83 Union president.

"We had three good candidates running for the position," Plummer said. "Even though the other two are rising seniors, Lucia had an amazing amount of experience in a variety of areas."

Halpern's experience includes serving on the Unica Forum Committee, the Steering Committee of the Student Development Council and serving as chairman of Student Government's Liaison Committee.

She has also been a freshman camp counselor, a "Big Buddy" in the Campus Y program and a member of Kappa Kappa Gamma Sorority. Halpern is a Morehead Scholar and N.C. Fellow as well.

"All of the activities I've been involved with have given me experience for the position in varying ways for dealing with things such as programming," Halpern said. "I worked closely with the Board of Education in high school and that taught me how to work with business leaders and the administration, which will help me to carry out the job of Union president."

She cited the Union's campus role as the reason she applied for Union president.

"Primarily, it is the greatest resource of extracurricular activities for the majority of the students at UNC," she said. "I very much believe in the types of programs offered."

Halpern plans to continue and further develop the quality and the quantity of the Union's programs.

"I want to offer more programs that will enable students to think about different ideas," she said, adding that she wanted to present more foreign films, documentaries, and seminars on social issues, as well as issues of state and national policy.

Halpern's first job as Union president will be to select chairmen for the twelve committees, which she said "will actually set the tone for the Union."

Applications for these positions will be available Monday, Feb. 14 at the Union desk, and Halpern will be interviewing applicants starting Tuesday, Feb. 22.

Halpern encouraged students to apply, even those without previous Union experience.

About 20 members for each Union committee will then be selected by the new chairman, she said.

"These people will play very active roles in the Union, and are more directly involved in deciding which programs will be provided by the Union," Halpern said. "I'd like to have a diversity of students on the activities committees, so that all students will be represented in the Union."

High cost of housing NCARH topic

UNC hosted about 180 students from 13 North Carolina universities, as well as students from Florida and South Carolina this weekend at the fourth annual conference of the North Carolina Association of Residence Halls.

Following the theme of the conference — "Residence Hall Realities" — Saturday's programs included a seminar describing how the price of room rents is determined, N.C. alcohol laws and student/administrator relations.

"The goal was to provide delegates with basic knowledge on how to operate a successful residence hall association," RHA President Scott Templeton said of the conference.

Jody Harpster, acting director of University housing, explained how the increase in student room rent was determined each year. Although this year's proposed rent increase has not yet been approved, it will rise between 5 and 20 percent, Carolyn Elftand, associate director of University housing, said Friday.

The room rent increase is required to be posted before the last day of letter sign up in case students wish to withdraw their applications, she said.

The costs of utilities, salaries, repairs and bond payments constitute about two-thirds of the University budget, Harpster said. Because these items predetermine most of the housing budget, "any budget cuts are going to come out of student services," he said.

Since University housing is self-supporting and receives no money from the state, he said the rent increase is based on the difference between the estimate costs for the following year and the estimated income.

The department obtains estimates from the utility division on the increase in electricity, fuel, water and sewer charges, Harpster said, adding that about 35 percent of the budget was strictly for utilities.

Then University housing department salaries, which are fixed by the state, and salaries for campus police and student employees, such as RAs and desk attendants, are computed, he said.

Another major portion of the budget goes to pay for the bonds on the dormitories. Harpster said that the department had no control over this amount.

Housing obtains income from room rent, rent and utility costs paid by the snack bars, and utility and janitorial fees from the laundry rooms.

The budget must then be approved by several administrators, any of whom can call for a revision, Harpster said, and the chancellor has final approval.

In another of the NCARH seminars, Carol Badgett, an attorney with UNC Legal Services, conducted a program on N.C. alcohol laws and their application to dormitory parties.

Citing the illegality of giving or selling alcohol to a minor, Badgett said, that "the minor is a problem and the minor is going to be more major if the drinking age is raised."

She offered suggestions for a dormitory party that would less likely lead to violence or arrests for Driving Under the Influence.

Dormitory parties should include some other event besides drinking to take the focus of the party away from alcohol, Badgett said. Non-alcoholic beverages, as well as snacks, should also be available to help reduce the amount and effect of the consumed alcohol.

She suggested having a few people around to drive intoxicated guests home.

A third NCARH conference focused on improving student/administrator relations by having each side define its role concepts and expectations of itself and its counterpart.

Students' most frequent complaints were the pressures of setting an example to other students, promoting administrators' programs that conflicted with residents' wishes, and fitting in with an administrator's 9-to-5 schedule.

On the other side of the discussion, administrators pointed out that they existed in a very political environment.

"There are some times that we cannot give students top priority," said Bob Tomlinson, director of residence life at UNC-Greensboro. "If our decision could adversely affect enrollment or alumni support, we have to be aware of that."

Responding to a question asking why administrators sometimes kept incidents, such as a rape on campus, concealed from other students, Tomlinson said it was usually to prevent the student body from overreacting or panicking.

Honor Code violation

Union poster thefts an expensive problem

By SCOTT WHARTON
Staff Writer

It's the old adage, "What goes up, must come down."

But Carolina Union officials wish that the concert promotion posters they put up wouldn't come down so fast — recent poster thefts are causing the Union to lose both money and patience.

Last Monday, four posters advertising the Feb. 15 Prince concert were put up around the Union, and only two hours later, they were all missing, said Jeff McElhanev, Publicity Committee chairperson for the Union. Stephanie Bircher, Performing Arts Committee chairperson, reported 40 missing posters publicizing a recent Triangle Dance Theater engagement.

And last weekend, someone stole a 6-foot-high poster for the Barnum Broadway show — valued at $35 to $40 — out of the Union, McElhanev said.

"It went on all last semester," McElhanev said. "But with the Prince concert, it's uncontrollable. I caught a few people taking them, and they have been really ugly about it."

Union officials agree that the rash of poster thefts is the worst they have seen, and say that more expensive, more durable forms of advertising may have to be used in the future.

The Union has lost about $100 on the theft of the Prince posters alone, and workers have resorted to tearing the posters in half to discourage thieves.

No dice. "They were still gone almost as soon as they were put up," McElhanev said.

The remaining Prince posters are now being watched carefully by Operations people in the Union, he said. The ones up are Xerox copies which cost only a penny per poster.

Since Union officials pay for concert promotion materials out of the student fees allotted to the Union, the poster theft essentially amounts to "students ripping off students," he said.

Wayne Plummer, 1982-83 Union President, said that he had spoken to Student Attorney General Bill Kimball about the problem. The Instrument of Student Judicial Governance prohibits the destruction, theft, or other misuse of University property, according to Kimball.

Plummer said he and other Union officials consider the poster thefts an Honor Code offense, and are ready to take any offenders to Honor Court.

Candidates for the member-at-large and advisory board member-at-large positions are on the ballot.

"Most people have decided that they can live with or without a spring concert or live with or without a cooking policy," Evans said.

"A lot of people tend to think that whoever's elected will do all right," Evans continued. "And most candidates, with the obvious exceptions, are qualified."

"But Student Government does do things for the student and there are differences in the candidates. One will represent them better than the other. And students should make their preferences known."

The less serious candidates, such as current student body presidential hopeful Hugh Reckshun, do make some contributions to campus politics with their campaigns, Evans said.

"They do a service in pointing out the shortcomings of Student Government," he said. "That kind of candidate does reflect the students' attitude that student government is a joke and that perhaps student government does take itself too seriously."

For whatever reasons, it is clear that students during the past several years have become increasingly less interested in campus elections. But each election is a new one and today students may follow the trends or reverse a rather old pattern.
