

Library budget cuts head Faculty Council reports

By LIZ LUCAS
Assistant University Editor

Annual committee reports to the Faculty Council Friday explored a variety of problems, including budget cuts in library funding, retirement programs for faculty members and the hiring and retention of women faculty.

Presided over by Chancellor Christopher C. Fordham III, the meeting also included a memorial resolution for Professor Ralph Patrick of the anthropology and epidemiology departments, who died Jan. 5.

Concerning annual reports, Assistant Professor of Biology Patricia F. Gensel, chairman of the Administrative Board of the Library, discussed funding for the library this year and plans for moving into the new Walter B. Davis Library this summer.

Gensel said that there were two areas of concern with funding. First, the book budget for 1982-83 was cut for the first time, though with increases in other categories the overall budget ended up higher than last year's by over $127,000, Gensel said. Though some of the funds from the book budget were returned, if such cuts continue it could hurt library acquisitions, she added.

UNC libraries have also been asked to return 8 percent of its non-salary budget, which has caused a staff freeze, Gensel said.

Before the cuts and freeze, the library system was able to obtain several serials and manuscripts, including a collection of small English manuscripts dealing with astronomy and science from the 13th through 15th centuries, Gensel said.

Library officials have been preparing for the move into the Davis Library, which is currently scheduled for this summer, she said. New policies concerning Davis Library are being worked on, including opening the study room on each floor to graduate students doing library research, rather than to other groups, Gensel said.

With budget cuts and salary freezes plaguing other departments besides the library, the Faculty Welfare committee report, presented by Chairman Derek J. Hodgson, professor of chemistry, highlighted faculty financial concerns.

The Faculty Council also heard a presentation by Mary Turner Lane, acting chairman of the Committee on the Status of Women and associate professor of education, about the hiring and retention of women faculty.

"Women faculty voiced three major concerns over and over again (in the first of the recently established Roundtable seminars for women)," Lane said.

"First, they experience a sense of isolation and a sense of tokenism. Many junior faculty women also said they lacked guidance and counseling in establishing timetables for tenure and professional development," she said.

"And finally, over half of the women who attended the sessions were in Health Affairs, and they had serious questions about the hiring and retention of women in their field," Lane said.

In other business, Richard Hayes, director of the UNC Office of Development, made a special presentation on fund raising.

The Office of Development, which coordinates private gift support coming into the University, has five main goals for the immediate future, Hayes said.

The office is waiting for the passage of a challenge grant proposal to the University from the National Endowment to the Humanities, Hayes said. This grant would benefit the College of Arts and Sciences, giving the University $1 for every $3 raised, he said.

"Private philanthropy may be the answer to some of our (the University) problems in this time of financial crunch," Hayes said.
