Americans will have no input into the South African government to promote change, he said.

Endowment Board Chairman John A. Tate Jr. thanked the PIRG members for speaking, and said that their presentation would be considered in future investment decisions.

After the meeting, Morris said he was unsure of the impact of PIRG's presentation.

"I really don't know what to expect," he said.

Farris Womack, UNC vice chancellor for business and finance, later said he was impressed with the PIRG presentation.

"I thought the students made a very good presentation," Womack said.

He said that he could not comment on whether the Endowment Board would divest of its holdings in companies that operate in South Africa.

half. Usually it even out, but not today."

Not much of anything has evened out for the Tar Heels, who haven't put together a solid, all-around game for the entire month of February.

"That's one thing we've got to improve on," Jordan said. "We've got to get more consistent."

For the past couple years, North Carolina has consistently beaten N.C. State and Valvano, but Saturday belonged to the Wolfpack.

"I told our kids after Whitt went down that if we worked enough, something good would happen," Valvano said. "Guess it was just our day."

Valvano was striding down the sidewalk outside Reynolds Coliseum 45 minutes later, raising his fist anytime a carload of State fans drove by.

He smiled, ran to catch up with his staff, and yelled, laughing, "I know that once something good would happen in my goddamn life."

But Town Council member R.D. Smith said Sunday he did not support any of Broadfoot's proposed changes.

"I'd rather see it (number of members) increased," Smith said. "I think we raised it to get better representation."

He said the council raised the number of representatives from seven to nine about five years ago.

Smith said he was also opposed to Broadfoot's proposal to allow the council to appoint members to the Housing Authority.

"I don't want the Housing Authority to become a political football," Smith said. "It has worked well when the mayor has made the appointments."

Town Council member Bev Kawalec said she wanted to withhold comment on Broadfoot's proposals until after she heard the council's discussion.

Broadfoot will officially present his recommendations at a council work session Tuesday.
