

Leftists making gains in French elections

The Associated Press

PARIS — Leftists appeared to be winning municipal elections in several key cities Sunday in a reversal of some of the gains by the opposition conservatives in the first round of voting last week.

Political analysts said the Socialists and Communists appeared to have been successful in getting out the voters in the big cities.

Projections by various news media indicated the left was on its way to winning a majority of the popular vote in the major cities, reversing last Sunday's trend.

The conservative neo-Gaullists and centrists, whose candidates won the majority of the popular vote last week, were falling short of the clear victory they had sought.

They had hoped to send a warning to President Francois Mitterrand's Socialist-Communist coalition that its policies have become unpopular.

The city races are seen as the only chance for the entire electorate to pass judgment on Mitterrand's policies between his election in 1981 and the next parliamentary vote in 1986.

In two of the most closely watched battles, Socialist Interior Minister Gaston Defferre won re-election to a sixth term as mayor of Marseille, where he was seriously threatened.

But Paris Mayor Jacques Chirac's conservatives swept all 20 Paris districts.

Lionel Jospin, first secretary of the Socialist Party, said the left's improved showing "must not lead us to ignore the warning given last Sunday."

Final turnout figures were not available early Sunday evening, but late afternoon figures were more than 10 percent above the vote for the first round conducted last week.

To the government's embarrassment, seven of Mitterrand's Cabinet ministers were defeated last week in races for municipal posts, and 10 others were forced into runoff Sunday.

In the opening round, races were decided in more than half of the communities, with the rest being decided Sunday.

The focus of interest has been on the cities with populations greater than 30,000, where elections are fought on national issues. Last week, the left kept 78 of those cities and the right kept 60. But conservative candidates gained 16 major cities from the left and forced Sunday's runoffs in 66 others.

The right edged out the left in overall returns last Sunday, gathering 46.95 percent of the vote compared with 36.67 percent for Socialist and Communist candidates. Candidates not aligned with the two major factions received the rest of the vote.

Under French law, no opinion polls were allowed to be published during the past two weeks leading up to the final voting.

WASHINGTON — A battle over an amendment favored by the nation's banks is holding up congressional action on a multibillion-dollar Senate jobs bill, which also contains money needed to pay unemployment benefits.

The legislation was designed to produce more jobs, but the impasse raised the possibility that as early as Tuesday some states would be unable to pay jobless benefits.

Resolving the dispute topped the agenda for congressional action in a week in which the Senate was also to vote on a Social Security bailout bill and the House was to debate a proposed nuclear weapons freeze.

President Reagan has threatened to veto the Senate jobs bill if it contains an amendment to repeal a 1982 law requiring financial institutions to withhold for federal taxes 10 percent of a depositor's interest and dividends. The banking community supports the amendment.

WASHINGTON — Congress appears ready to raise the retirement age as part of a Social Security rescue plan, despite pleas from liberal Democrats that the move would penalize people unable to work beyond age 65.

"We are changing the tradition of this country," said House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. on the House floor last week. "We are changing the system of this government and how this Congress has always acted that each generation should take care of the generation that went before it."

Opponents of raising the retirement age argue that the change is unfair to people who cannot work beyond the current retirement age of 65 — or even the early retirement age of 62 — because of poor health or reduced stamina.

Supporters of the change say it is a logical reflection of increased longevity and would avoid adding to the tax burden of current workers.

The $165 billion bailout plan racing through Congress was easily approved by the House last week. The Senate will be considering its version this week, possibly as early as Tuesday.

WASHINGTON — Israeli Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir insisted Sunday there must be "close cooperation" on security matters between Lebanon and Israel before his country will withdraw its troops from Lebanon.

Following a meeting with Secretary of State George P. Shultz, Shamir told reporters the Lebanese government "will not be able to control the security of its territory by its own forces."

"Therefore it is our conviction that there must be a close cooperation between us and Lebanon," Shamir said. Without such cooperation, he said, Israel fears it would again become the target for terrorist attacks across the Lebanese border.

BEIRUT, Lebanon — The Israeli army is conducting a detailed census of south Lebanon that asks village mayors to provide such information as the names of men of fighting age, sources of dynamite for quarrying, and automobile license plate numbers.

The census, coupled with Israel's recent attempts to form village militias and collect taxes to finance them, appears aimed at enhancing security in south Lebanon and helping to prevent a resurgence of guerrilla activity after an Israeli withdrawal.

An Israeli army spokesman in the Beirut suburb of Yarz said Sunday that Israel needs the information to help look after residents of south Lebanon, occupied by Israeli troops since their invasion last summer routed Yasser Arafat's Palestinian guerrillas.
