

Local arrest procedures described

By TOM CONLON
Staff Writer

A Chapel Hill police cruiser pursues a car on Airport Road. The car is overtaken by the cruiser and forced to pull off the road. An officer steps up to the driver and asks him to step out of the car. What happens to the driver at this point? What are the procedures local law enforcement officers follow when making an arrest?

Chapel Hill and Carrboro Police Departments follow statewide procedures for arrests and trials, but each department has additional regulations that apply to its own community, local law enforcement officials said.

"Chapel Hill's departmental regulations are not that different from state regulations, but we have some minor policies of our own," Maj. Arnold Gold of the Chapel Hill Police Department said. "Police departments set regulations that serve the norms of the community. It all depends on the clientele that you have in a community."

Gold said that while Chapel Hill is affected by all crimes, violent crimes are less common in Chapel Hill than in many other communities.

"We deal with everyone. But being that we are predominantly a university community, emphasis is placed on other areas," he said. "Our biggest problems in Chapel Hill are property crimes, larceny, vandalism and alcohol-related incidents."

Gold said that most arrests are made at the officer's discretion, although driving while intoxicated warrants automatic arrest.

"Generally we try to avoid arrests where possible," he said. "Most street offenses are just citations that set a court date or the option of paying a fine without a court appearance. This saves everyone's time and avoids problems."

If an arrest is warranted, an individual is taken to the magistrate's office, located in the Chapel Hill Police Department building on Airport Road. A magistrate issues a warrant and posts a bond if he determines probable cause on the initial arrest of the officer.

All misdemeanor cases are handled in the district court in Chapel Hill, with appeals and felonies handled at the superior court level in Hillsborough, Gold said.

Fingerprints are taken for individuals charged with a felony or serious misdemeanors such as assault, but not for DUIs. Handcuffing is left to the officer's discretion and is used only for the safety of the officer or person involved.

"Handcuffing is used only when necessary," Gold said. "It usually is used to keep the victim from being agitated, especially when alcohol is involved."

Gold said that even if serious crimes were more prevalent in Chapel Hill, the department's policies probably would not change significantly.

"Ninety percent of our action involves no force, and when there is force, it is generally only verbal force," Gold said. "People who are being arrested for the first time may not be used to authority telling them to do something. Most people accept police action, and although they don't like it, they deal with it themselves."

Most local residents who are arrested are released by a sign-on bond. Non-local residents would have a bond posted but probably would not be jailed, he said.

The Carrboro Police Department follows similar procedures, but has its own departmental manual, a Carrboro police official said. Arrests are processed through the magistrate in Chapel Hill.

In both towns, statewide procedures are followed in felony cases. A defendant is required to appear in a district court within a 96-hour period for a pre-trial hearing. At this hearing, a defendant is informed of his charges, has the option to request a state-appointed attorney if he cannot afford a private one, and a date is set for a probable cause hearing in district court. The defendant also has the option to discuss his bond with the judge, who has the power to either raise, lower or keep the bond the same.

The resolution now goes to the full Energy and Commerce committee whose chairman, Rep. John D. Dingell, D-Mich., is also chairman of the subcommittee. If it passes there, the full House would consider whether to send the matter to the U.S. attorney in Washington for possible criminal prosecution.

WASHINGTON — The Senate's march toward passage of the Social Security rescue bill was slowed Monday by a new effort to thwart a government plan to have banks withhold 10 percent of interest and dividend income.

Sen. John Melcher, D-Mont., offered an amendment to the rescue bill to delay the July 1 start of withholding on bank accounts and stock holdings for six months.

It was unclear how long the Senate would debate Melcher's amendment. The Senate passed a jobs bill last week after it was tied up for days by an effort to repeal the withholding plan.

Melcher said the withholding was "an injustice" that would deprive people of money that could be earning more interest.

N.C. banks unhurt by oil price drops

By J. BONASIA
Staff Writer

Although some large national banks have been hurt by recent declines in oil prices, banks in North Carolina have not been affected, according to state bank officials.

Since North Carolina banks are not very committed to oil-related loans, they consequently won't be set back by a 20 percent decline in oil prices, said Mal Murray, senior vice president of First Union National Bank in Charlotte.

"The banks here in North Carolina aren't heavily enough into the problem areas to be threatened," Murray said. "But banks in some other states like Texas or California have considerable investments in oil exporting nations. They might be hurt."

Thomas Storrs, chairman of North Carolina National Bank of Charlotte, said that the bank is not deeply involved with oil developments. In fact, Storrs is optimistic about the price declines.

"The drops in oil prices will make for a better U.S. economy and we as a state should share in that growth," he said.

An NCNB assistant vice president, Michael Woody, agreed, adding that on a loan portfolio basis, NCNB's oil involvement is "infinitesimally small."

North Carolina Banking Commissioner Jim Currie called this state's overall involvement comparatively insignificant.

"Upon examination, all state chartered banks are in good shape. Their patterns have not been at all erratic," he said. Currie added that North Carolina has "been blessed with good, solid banking for some time."

Lower oil prices have been anticipated for months, according to John Medlin, president of Wachovia Bank and Trust Co. of Winston-Salem. As a result, some of the biggest domestic oil industry credit problems have surfaced already and been absorbed, he said.

The positive results of the price declines won't be initially flagrant, Murray said.

"Overall, the positive impact will be a stimulation of general economic activity," he said. "Essentially, all of our customers will eventually be helped by it."

U.S. economy shows growth spurt

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The economy likely will notch a 4 percent growth in the first quarter, the best spurt in two years and compelling evidence that "recovery" is under way, a government report showed Monday.

President Reagan cited the news as a promise of a "long and strong" rebound from the worst recession since World War II. Other administration officials were equally optimistic.

Private economists were far more cautious about the prospects for a robust and durable upturn that would put jobless Americans back to work. They said the recovery could be shattered unless interest rates decline further.

The Commerce Department's so-called "flash" report, a crude, preliminary estimate of economic activity, showed inflation-adjusted gross national product expanding at an annual rate of 4 percent during the first three months of this year.

That would be the fastest growth rate since the first quarter of 1981 and confirm the nearly unanimous view of economists that the severe recession that began in mid-1981 drew to an end last December.

Reagan, in a speech at the Agriculture Department, said, "We're encouraged that recovery is under way and that it looks like it'll be long and strong."

Chief White House economist Martin S. Feldstein said the new estimate suggests the economy can sustain a growth rate of at least 4 percent for the rest of the year, a better performance than the 3.1 percent growth the administration had forecast just two months ago.

Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan, who misread the deep recession a year ago by forecasting the economy "would come roaring back in the spring," said with a smile: "If one listens closely, one can almost hear a roar."

The administration's optimism did not rub off on private forecasters, who warned that interest rates are still too high.

"Interest rates have to come down some more for a good second-half recovery," said Allen Sinai, vice president of Data Resources, Inc., in Cambridge, Mass. "The risks are very high of the recovery petering out because of high interest rates."

Sinai added that economic activity is still pretty flat except for strong gains by the auto and housing industries. That suggests that the civilian jobless rate — which has receded from a recession peak of 10.8 percent to a current 10.4 percent — will edge up again.

"The recovery is not broad enough to encourage business to rehire people at a rapid clip," he said.

David Ernst, an economist with Washington-based Evans Economics, said economic growth will not be as brisk this spring. "We are unequivocally out of recession, but the recovery still has not spread to all sectors of the economy."

Some economists fear interest rates will rise this year if the Federal Reserve Board decides to stop the nation's money supply from growing as rapidly as it has in the past few months. The money growth has helped fuel the recovery, but the central bank is afraid too much growth will plant the seeds for high inflation down the road.

'84 Contenders N.C. politicians take sides in primary

The Associated Press

Prominent politicians in North Carolina say they are feeling pressures to choose among the many potential presidential candidates vying for their support.

The North Carolina primary will commit at least 80 delegates for the Democratic presidential nomination in 1984, and could make the difference if the nomination process remains close.

Former U.S. Sen. Robert Morgan may have to choose among six hopefuls. While Morgan was in the Senate, he sat next to Sen. John Glenn of Ohio and considers Glenn a good friend. But Morgan also was a close confidant of Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado.

Morgan and Sen. Alan Cranston of California teamed up together on a special commission on housing. Morgan will introduce Cranston next month at a business convention in Pinehurst.

Morgan also will introduce Sen. Dale Bumpers of Arkansas at a state Democratic Party function next month in Raleigh. Morgan and Sen. Ernest Hollings of South Carolina go back together many years in Southern politics. And Morgan said he and former Vice President Walter Mondale "were very close."

For now, Morgan said, he's for Mondale. But he will keep an option open for Hollings should the dark-horse campaign of the former South Carolina governor catch fire.

"It looks as if I'm going to support John Glenn," said U.S. Rep. Robin Britt of Greensboro. "He is a true moderate, and I think he represents where the Democratic Party ought to be going."

Mondale came to Greensboro last fall and campaigned for Britt's long-shot candidacy for Congress.

Glenn also gave Britt a hand, touring Guilford, Alamance and Davidson counties very early in Britt's campaign to unseat Republican incumbent Eugene Johnston. Britt will appear at a giant fund raiser for Glenn in Raleigh Friday night.

Former U.S. Rep. Richardson Preyer also is being wooed by the candidates, but he said he probably will not take sides because he heads a statewide Democratic unity group called the N.C. Campaign Fund.

"The fund is trying to raise money for Democrats in general, and I think it might handicap that effort if I took a strong position," said Preyer, who divides his time between helping the party and teaching at UNC-Chapel Hill.

Gov. James B. Hunt Jr. plans to meet with Glenn when he comes to Raleigh, but Hunt press aide Brent Hackney said this should not be interpreted as an endorsement. "He's not ready to jump on anyone's bandwagon," Hackney said.

The governor's goal is to find "a candidate acceptable to the mainstream Democrats in the South," Hackney said. "But he has no preconceived notion who that is."

Glenn spent several nights at the Governor's Mansion last fall. Hollings, Hart, Mondale and Reubin Askew, former two-term governor of Florida, also have visited the mansion.

State Sen. Russell Walker of Asheboro, chairman of the state Democratic Party, said he will take sides in the 1984 Democratic race, but he isn't ready to say which side.

"I'll probably be stepping down as party chairman this year," Walker said. "If I do, that releases me to have some preference for the party nominee."

U.S. Rep. Stephen Neal, whose 5th District includes Rockingham County, said he isn't ready for an early endorsement of a presidential candidate.

"I like several people — Senator Glenn, Vice President Mondale, Senator Hollings," Neal said. All three campaigned for Neal in his '82 re-election bid. And he termed Hart a "very impressive young man."

The presidential candidates also will court North Carolina's heavily Democratic black population. But black voters may play hard to get.

"There is a possibility of a black candidate coming out for the purpose of letting people know that blacks are upset," said H.M. "Mickey" Michaux of Durham, a U.S. attorney in the Carter administration and one of the state's most influential black Democrats.

He said civil rights activist Jesse Jackson, U.S. Rep. Walter Fauntroy of the District of Columbia and Mayor Richard Hatcher of Gary, Ind., were possible black contenders.

Michaux said he has been contacted directly or indirectly by all of the candidates.

"I'm looking at Mondale, Hart and Glenn," he said.
