but not at the expense of the village atmosphere of the town.

"My feeling and the feelings of others who live here is that we like the village atmosphere," said Sherry Jones, an 11-year resident of Carrboro. "We want to see Carrboro progress and be successful and not lose the village atmosphere."

Jay Bryan of the Friends of Old Carrboro said, "Basically, I'm interested in preserving the character and integrity of downtown in such a way that it doesn't affect the residential area of downtown."

"This can be done by using the existing buildings as well as constructing new buildings that blend in with the architecture and scale of downtown."

Bryan said he felt that the revitalization of the downtown area can be accomplished by concentrating on two elements: 1) creating an atmosphere that is attractive to people, and 2) encouraging good businesses into the area.

"Carrboro has the opportunity to do something special, and it shouldn't waste the opportunity by acting for the wrong interest," Bryan said.

SCAU

The Roommate Referral Service form asks questions about the applicant as well as what that person expects in a roommate. Questions ask for information on items such as a person's study, leisure and smoking habits.

Students can indicate the degree of importance of certain characteristics on a scale of zero to 10. If a 10 is entered beside a characteristic, only people fitting that qualification will be listed on the printout.

Beside each name on the printout is a percentage predicting the compatibility of two people matched by the computer. An advantage to the Roommate Referral Service will be having a centralized list of those looking for a roommate, Owens said.

Students interested in the services should pick up forms at Carr Building or Suite B of the Carolina Union and return them to Suite B after they are completed.

SCAU will also have a table set up in front of the Union on March 29, 30 and 31 for students who are interested in the Apartment Locator and Roommate Referral services.

or the multiple allegations of wrongdoing at the agency.

"My concern is the future," he said. "To be extent that any charges are leveled, we will do the best we can to investigate."

Ruckelshaus said that from its formation, the EPA has been accused of giving preferential treatment to polluters.

"There was never any substance to it when I was there and there won't be any substance now," he said.

At the agency, many employees expressed happiness, saying Reagan had picked a good man to restore the agency's tattered image.

Hugh Kaufman, an EPA whistleblower whose criticism has irritated Republican and Democratic administrations, said he viewed the appointment with "cautious optimism."

"I came in when Bill did. I found him to be a man of integrity and a solidly based administrator," Kaufman said. "It remains to be seen whether he did in fact strike the right kind of bargain with the president and will be able to get the agency back to doing what the law requires."

For the record

In the article titled "Committee announces plan for reserved seating at concert" in Monday's paper, the DTH incorrectly reported the date that applications are due for student groups interested in block seats for the Carolina Concert. The applications are due Monday, March 28 in Suite C of the Carolina Union. Groups selected for block seats at the concert will be notified on March 29. The DTH regrets the error.

Monroe announces executive assistants

By LIZ LUCAS
Assistant University Editor

"As a whole, the selection process took a little longer than in the past," Monroe said. "But I can see how important it is to take time and pick good people to work with for the positions." Monroe was elected Feb. 8.

The new executive assistants, who were personally selected by Monroe and did not go through an application process, are Wayne Boyette, Anna Giattina, Sharon Moylan and Paul Parker.

Boyette, a junior history major from Wilson, formerly served as chairman of the Student Government Transportation Committee. He has been appointed as executive assistant in charge of coordinating Student Government committees.

"There have been a few structural changes regarding the committees," Boyette said. "I'll be coordinating the committees rather than acting as a liaison officer between them and the president. I'll be making sure the committees get the things done that they have set out to do."

Giattina, a former executive assistant for the Residence Hall Association, is a senior public policy major from Homewood, Ala. She will serve as executive assistant in charge of chancellor's committees.

Moylan, selected as executive assistant in charge of running the Student Government office, is a sophomore economics major from Raleigh. She has served on the Student Government State and National Affairs Committee.

"Right now I don't plan any changes in the way the office is being run," Moylan said. "I'll just have to wait for the committees to be organized to find out what will make things work most smoothly."

And Parker, a sophomore international studies major from Jacksonville, Fla., is a former head of the Student Part-Time Employment Service. He was chosen as executive assistant in charge of administration and policy.

"I'm planning a retreat with the administration and campus leaders, like the student attorney general, the Black Student Movement president, the Carolina Athletic Association president, and the Residence Hall Association president," Parker said. "If we get to know each other better there will be less tension between the administration and the student organizations."

Technical difficulties delay library opening

By TOM CONLON
Staff Writer

The new Walter Royal Davis Library, scheduled to open in late August or early September of this year, is being delayed from opening due to technical difficulties.

The library was originally expected to open in August 1982, but the new opening date is yet to be determined by the UNC department of engineering and construction, said Larry Alford, circulation library for Wilson Library.

Delays were caused by unexpected problems, said Jim Richter, superintendent for T.A. Loving Co., the library's general contractors.

"We had some weather problems, some cranes that fell, and other standard construction problems over the past year," Richter said.

Walter Royal Davis, for whom the library is named, is a former member and chairman of the UNC Board of Trustees. Chapel Hill's utility companies were owned by the University up to the mid-1970s, Alford said. When they were sold, the North Carolina General Assembly received the money from the sale. Davis lobbied successfully in the General Assembly to have the legislature return to the University most of the proceeds from the sale, Alford said.

The $22.6 million construction cost for the library was provided in full from the sale's proceeds, Alford said.

Davis is now a member of the Board of Governors.

Once the library is completed, it will take two months to equip it and another two months to move all the books, Alford said. Midway through the moving of books the library will be open for students, he said.

All of Wilson Library's 1.5 million volumes will be moved to the Davis Library with the exception of the Rare Book Collection, the North Carolina Collection, and the Southern Historical Collection, Alford said.

The collections remaining behind in Wilson constitute approximately 200,000 books and will be housed in the 10-story stack addition built on the south side of Wilson Library in 1977, Alford said.

Wilson Library will undergo a major two-year renovation before reopening for the special collections, Alford said. At that time, the stack additions will be used for storage and additional materials, he said.

The new eight-story, 438,000-square-foot Davis Library will hold up to 1.8 million volumes and government documents and will provide 3,300 seats. Wilson now provides a total of 1,200 general purpose seats, Alford said.

The Undergraduate Library, built in 1968, will not be affected by the move and will continue to serve its present function, Alford said.

Although the Davis Library will hold nearly the same amount of materials as the Wilson Library, it will provide better environmental conditions for materials and students, Alford said. Before the stack addition was added to Wilson, excess books were stored in Wilson's lower hallway, the top two floors of Manning Hall, the sub-basement of the law school library and at a cotton warehouse in Durham, he said.

"The new library will help us meet our needs for the future as our collections and volumes continue to grow," Alford said. "The research space will be far superior to what we have now and the administrative functions of the library will also have more room provided so staff can better carry out their services."

The Davis Library will have the capacity to utilize new electronic technology for the transmission, storage, indexing and retrieval of knowledge, said Gordon Rutherford, UNC planning director.

Ground for the Davis Library was broken on Oct. 2, 1979, and the building was designed by Leslie N. Boney Architects, of Wilmington, N.C., and Mitchell/Guirgola, of Philadelphia and New York, Rutherford said.

The library was designed to aesthetically fit in with surrounding buildings, Rutherford said.

"The building is in scale with the Student Union and Hamilton Hall by which it is located," Rutherford said.

"The architects treated each two floors as a single floor in its design. The architecture, alone, has no central theme other than to function as the major library for the University," he said.
