Aiming for league title

UNC soccer club defeats State

By MIKE WATERS
Staff Writer

Last Sunday fourteen men in North Carolina soccer uniforms took the field at N.C. Central University, while most of Chapel Hill's citizens sat glued to their televisions watching the basketball Tar Heels.

Who were these men and why were they about to play soccer in a driving rainstorm on a mud-soaked football field?

Clubs

The fourteen undergraduate, graduate and doctoral students comprised the UNC's men's soccer club, and as club president Larry Goodson explained, "We're out here because we enjoy it. We really like to play; we have to."

A member of the N.C. Soccer League's Triangle Division, UNC entered Sunday's game trailing N.C. State's entry by a single standing point. State boasted a 4-0-1 record compared with the Tar Heels' 3-0-2 mark.

Before the game nobody was thinking about league standings. A slow, steady rain had been falling since morning. The squad adjusted. They changed clothes in the protected stairwell leading to the pressbox. One look at the field and most people would have gone back to a warm shower; the players went out to warm up.

UNC controlled the ball throughout the first half. N.C. Central managed just three shots on goal. Freshman goalkeeper Bruce Kallor knocked all three away. The Tar Heels took a one goal lead into the second half following a Goodson penalty kick.

During the intermission there was no locker room pep talk. There wasn't a locker room. The team briefly discussed the first half and planned for the final 45 minutes. A few players took refuge from the rain underneath the leaky bleachers.

The UNC team provided the same relentless pressure in the second half. And the Eagle defense was visibly weakening. Katey Assem, a doctoral student from Ghana, hit Goodson with a crossing pass, and the forward had no trouble finding the back of the net.

Two minutes later Assem sent another pass over the middle; this time Dave Sanders was the open man. Sanders' score increased the lead to 3-0.

Goodson tallied the fourth and final goal on a breakaway after faking a defender into the mud. Five minutes later Kallor had his shutout.

Is there more than just their love for the game that drives these people to play in lousy weather — without the fans and the glory?

"We do have a team goal," Goodson said. "We want to get into the state playoffs and do well there. Some of these guys were on high school championship teams, some have always played on cellar dwellers. It's important to us to win our division."

Last Sunday, N.C. State lost to Miller Atlas of Fayetteville, 5-3. UNC now leads the Triangle Division by one point as the most important game of the season nears.

On April 16 the Tar Heels and State, after playing to a draw in their first match, meet on the AstroTurf Field.
