we 'rubber stamp' (what) the University does. We have never had 'buddy-buddy' relations with anyone at the University. We don't always think the same way."

Windsor said the Landmark's goal was to be a true "people's advocate," and that that reputation had already spread throughout the local community to the extent that he is besieged by citizens seeking redress for their grievances. Windsor said his office is swamped Saturdays from 7 a.m. to 9 p.m., with people complaining that their rents are too high or that they are being cheated on their sewer bills.

The responsible newspaper is the only recourse the ordinary man has through which to air his grievances, Windsor said, because the courts are too expensive.

"Politicians are pragmatists," Windsor said, because they know the public cannot afford to challenge the system through the courts and they realize most papers are not receptive to what people have to say. Windsor called the addressing of such public grievances a newspaper's primary function.

Windsor said that this function of the Landmark is "good news" and proof that he is "trying to make the system work."

"Most of what I point out is the good in our society," Windsor said. One of his articles told the story of a boy who stopped his car in order to rescue a turtle from the center stripe of the highway. Windsor said people clipped that story from the paper and called his office to voice their appreciation for such a story.

Bulky said the Anvil "has a different perspective and tries to dig deeper" than most newspapers and deals with different stories than is common stock for most daily newspapers.

Because his staff is less transient than reporters at most newspapers, Bulky said the Anvil has a "background on what goes on" at town council meetings and in the local political arena. This familiarity allows the Anvil to understand the going-on and to better interpret their significance, he said.

Bulky said it is dangerous for an inexperienced local news reporter to walk into a town council meeting and pick and choose what is important from an agenda of 50 items. "A lot may go over their heads," he said.

Just the presence of the Anvil and the competition it provides in local news reporting is an advantage to the community, Bulky said, because it forces the competing newspapers to maintain better coverage. He cited the News & Observer's new Chapel Hill bureau as an example of such pressure.

Campbell said that nothing the Anvil or Landmark does is in conflict with The Chapel Hill Newspaper.

"Competition doesn't bother me," he said. Bulky and Windsor believe in what they are doing, Campbell said. "I think they're objective, although I wouldn't run some stories they run and they wouldn't run some stories and editorials that we run."

Eventually three such satellites will be in orbit, forming a network that will carry the nation's space program into a new era in communications. There will be one each of the satellites over the Atlantic and the Pacific and a third over the continental United States. Three spare satellites are being manufactured and held in reserve.

Each of the two-and-one-half ton satellites will be able to handle communications from 26 satellites or ground stations at once. They will pluck signals out of the air from weather, military, commercial, scientific and Earth observation satellites and send them to the ground at the rate of billions of bits of information per second in any of three frequency service bands.

In one frequency alone, the K-band, a single TDRS can relay up to 600 million bits of digital information each second. Eight bits of data are needed to form one character — such as a letter in the alphabet — but the TDRS K-band capacity is so large that it can relay enough information in one second to fill 46 encyclopedia volumes.

The satellite also operates in the S-band and C-band frequencies.

The system will be able to relay to the ground pictures of the Earth of a clarity never before achieved. This will enable scientists to study details of Earth features not before examined from space.

RALEIGH — The state Supreme Court, in a 4-3 decision, broke new legal ground Tuesday by ordering another hearing for a woman denied worker's compensation although hampered by a respiratory ailment.

The court held that a chronic lung disease caused partially or wholly by on-the-job exposure to cotton dust could qualify the victim for compensation — even if other factors, such as longtime smoking, also are present.

Dissenting justices said the ruling effectively reversed decisions in similar cases issued as recently as 1981.

Writing for the majority, Associate Justice James Exum said the N.C. Industrial Commission misinterpreted the law in denying compensation to Margaret Rutledge, a 48-year-old Georgia resident and former employee of Tulex Corp. and Kings Yarn of Gastonia and several other cotton mills.

WASHINGTON — President Reagan's private-sector task force said Tuesday the government could save $48 billion over the next three years, mostly by clamping down on benefits to federal workers — including early retirement.

In the first, six-volume installment of its cost-cutting study, the business-oriented group concluded that better management of the 2 million-member civilian work force would trim spending by $34.7 billion.

The remaining $13 billion in cuts projected by the President's Private Sector Survey on Cost Control would result from placing new curbs on programs administered by a host of government agencies.

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration is doing nothing to discourage mounting evidence that it is actively backing anti-Sandinista guerrillas in Nicaragua, feeding speculation that it is involved.

Although U.S. officials are insisting that anything the administration is doing is legal, some members of Congress are expressing grave doubts.

Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., said today there is "great concern" about Nicaragua in Congress. He said he planned to talk with leaders of the Senate Intelligence Committee to find out "what is going on, what they know about it and what the circumstances are."

PARIS — In the biggest spy sweep in French history, France's left-wing government on Tuesday expelled about 50 Soviet diplomats and officials for trying to steal military secrets.

The Soviet Embassy called the expulsions an unjustified political act by the government of Socialist President Francois Mitterrand and said France would have to bear the negative consequences.

The Interior Ministry would not state the exact number of Soviets who hastily left the country on a special plane sent from Moscow.
